

Article | 29 June 2026

Eurozone sentiment indicator reveals easing inflationary pressures in June

Economic sentiment improved in June but remains well below pre-Middle East war levels, and employment expectations have weakened. With inflation pressures subsiding, the question of whether the ECB needs to continue to hike becomes more pressing

Europe's worries have promptly shifted from fuel shortages to blistering heat

Europe's worries have promptly shifted from fuel shortages to blistering heat. While also not great for the economy, it is surely preferable to another energy shock. And sentiment among businesses and consumers is cautiously improving. The increase in the Economic Sentiment Indicator from 93.7 to 95 marks the second cautious increase in a row, with most of the sampling done before the US-Iran deal was reached. If the deal holds, we can expect further improvements.

When looking at the survey results for output in June, it disappoints for both industry and services. The eurozone is clearly rounding out a poor quarter with stagnation a real possibility. But expectations for the months ahead are on the rise. Concerningly, though, the employment outlook is weakening, which could prove to be a continued drag on the service sector.

Most crucially in this time of revived inflation worries, expectations for selling prices of both industry and services fell fast in June. This indicates that pressures on core inflation were already easing ahead of the deal and the subsequent sharp decline in oil prices.

For the ECB, the question is how much faith it has in the fragile US-Iran deal. Because at face value, the time to hike already seems to have passed. Oil prices have rapidly come down, the economy remains slow and while businesses are still going to pass through higher costs to consumers, the pace with which they plan to do so already seems to be fading.

But if the deal doesn't hold and problems resurface, inflationary pressures could swiftly return. Some more time to see how this plays out before the next move on rates is therefore not a bad thing. July may be a great time to pause for the ECB, like it is for the rest of Europe.

Author

Bert Colijn

Chief Economist, Netherlands

bert.colijn@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.