The opinion polls called it right with sweeping victories for the Democrats in the midterm elections. The key question is whether the president will look to secure deals or whether gridlock on the domestic front will force him to look outwards

The results are in and it's a big Democratic victory

With most votes counted, it's clear the Democrats have secured a decisive victory in the US midterms, claiming majorities in both the Senate and House of Representatives. Though this outcome had become the consensus in recent weeks, the scale of the Democratic victory in the Senate in particular is noteworthy. Wins in Texas, but also in less expected states like South Carolina, Kansas and Iowa, symbolise a major shift in American political opinion since the last election in 2024.

Dealmaker-in-Chief or Mr Veto?

The Republican majorities in the House and Senate in the first half of Trump's presidential term allowed him to sign the One Big Beautiful Bill Act into law in July 2025. Other legislation included the Laken Riley Act, which tightened immigration and border policy, the GENIUS Act, which created a regulatory structure for stablecoins, the HALT Fentanyl Act on drugs and the TAKE IT DOWN Act on online regulation.

The obvious outcome from the result on Tuesday is that a Democrat-controlled Congress will stifle President Trump's domestic agenda in his final two years in power. A bill has to be approved by both the House and the Senate before being passed on to the president to sign or veto. With the Democrats having control of the legislative agenda in the House and Senate, the president has already warned that he will likely become "Mr Veto". The only way to overcome that would be for the Democrats to secure a two-thirds supermajority in both houses. That isn't the case after last night's results.

What the Democrats can seek to achieve

Key sectors of corporate America will be nervous that Democratic control of important oversight committees could bring greater scrutiny. More congressional hearings involving AI and technology business leaders would be a likely outcome, while a strong performance at the ballot box may embolden local Democratic leaders to try to stall unpopular data centre construction in their constituencies. Fossil fuel producers may face similar challenges.

Democrats will likely feel even more confident about pushing back against President Trump's policies on Iran, support of Israel and any escalation of tariffs. They may apply more pressure on the president to sound tougher towards Russia and to provide support to Ukraine, but the final call will remain with the president.

Investigations into President Trump, his family and members of his administration may also be stepped up as Democrats exercise their greater powers. Inquiries into finances and business dealings could re

What will the president do?

A key question is whether a constrained President Trump, entering the final phase of his tenure, becomes more willing to accept political or market disruption in pursuit of his objectives.

If there is little sense of any compromise, the ensuing gridlock in Congress would leave the president to focus on areas where he can exercise executive power: 1) foreign policy and diplomacy, including trade policy, 2) national security and defence, 3) law enforcement and regulatory policy, 4) personnel appointments (subject to Senate approval), and 5) administration and management policy.

This suggests Iran, Russia/Ukraine and tariffs/trade policy are likely to be the focus for the president. Tariff policy could increasingly be used to incentivise foreign partners to align with US foreign policy objectives, for example by pressuring NATO members to increase defence spending.

More fundamentally, heavy defeats in the House and Senate will be interpreted as a referendum on President Trump's policies and potentially prompt figures within the Republican Party to take the view that it is time to open the debate on its future direction. With Trump's influence set to fade, leading lights within the party, most notably JD Vance and Marco Rubio, may attempt to shore up marginal, given the risk that tariffs also push inflation higher. Overall, we retain a bias towards the 10-year yield heading towards 5.25%.

The dollar is softer on the outcome, though it has recovered from its lows seen in early Asia when a sharp fall in Nasdaq futures was warning of a larger re-pricing of the tech story. Nasdaq futures have since retraced the majority of those losses. Limiting a larger dollar correction on this news is probably a still-resilient US economy and at least one more rate hike from the Federal Reserve. The dollar could see a little more weakness into 2027, however, if an emboldened Democratic Party takes greater issue with Republican policy, including deregulation and the AI build-out. And the potential for a prolonged government shutdown in mid-2027 adds to the case for a weaker dollar next summer.

What it means for Europe and China

With the outcome of the vote limiting President Trump's options at home, he is likely to focus more heavily on foreign and trade policy. The result could be greater volatility and uncertainty for the global economy.

the president's patience and slow the pace of defence spending increases, particularly given their own fiscal constraints. Alternatively, and less likely, a stifled but less angry Trump administration could try to bring the wars in Iran and Ukraine to an end. Constrained by Congress and the Supreme Court on trade, it could ultimately, intentionally or otherwise, end up indirectly supporting the European economy.

China's main response will be to wait and see, as it will react to actual policy changes rather than the shifts within Congress. The main potential trigger points would be Taiwan arms sales, tariffs and other trade/investment restrictions.

Personal ties between the two leaders appear good, but with President Trump's policy focus being channelled towards foreign and trade policy, China could end up in the crosshairs again. The trade truce is set to expire in January, and it seems like both sides are not interested in going back to the mutually destructive peak tariff scenario we had in 2025, but it cannot be ruled out. As with Europe, if Trump appears weakened by the outcome of the midterms, China could sense that it is time to start looking beyond 2028, triggering a revaluation of its long-term US strategy.
