It Depends on What You are Trying to Achieve

- Pre-budget speculation has tended to start from the presumption that more revenue is needed. The justification is sometimes the perceived need to fund spending priorities that are assumed – perhaps erroneously – to be rising. In other quarters, minimising the deficit or government debt appears to be the objective. Whatever the objective, it should be scrutinised not assumed.
- Speculation about changes to the capital gains tax (CGT) regime highlight the potential to increase revenue, but there is no guarantee of this. For example, switching back to the pre-1999 regime or the simplified version of it we have previously suggested will only boost revenue if asset price growth exceeds 5%.
- There are many possible objectives that fiscal systems – tax and spending – can address, often different objectives in different parts of the system. “Boost revenue” is not the only possible goal, and tweaking the tax system is not the only solution to a policy objective.

Speculation is building as budget night approaches. While the government must deal with the immediate issues in front of it stemming from the Middle East conflict, many observers are focused on the maxim “never let a good crisis go to waste” and hoping for broader reforms – usually the same ones they were advocating before the conflict erupted. The question of what the budget should do rests, however, on the deeper question of what problems the government is trying to solve.

For example, recent discussion has been focused on an assumed need for extra revenue. Tax reforms are dissected for how much more they might raise, while revenue windfalls from higher commodity prices are downplayed. Underlying this view are other presumptions – seemingly widespread across different levels of government and the bureaucracy – that “people expect more from government nowadays” and that governments should strive to meet those expectations. Absent from these discussions are the questions of whether the government's effort and resources are being deployed effectively, and whether it can stop doing some things altogether.

A related presumption underlying the search for more revenue is the belief that population ageing is shrinking the workforce, even though this is not true in Australia and most other advanced economies outside North America.

A separate pathway to the search for more revenue comes from a different premise: that the federal fiscal position is weak and large revenue measures (and/or spending cuts)

must be found to reduce the deficit significantly. It is good to have strong public finances. It keeps government borrowing costs low and leaves plenty of space to spend in a crisis. Yet the presumption that government finances are parlous and in need of repair sits oddly with Australia's actual federal fiscal position, which is stronger than many of its peers.

Take the recent speculation about removing the CGT discount. It has been touted as a revenue-raising measure, but there is no guarantee of this. One could consider moving back to the pre-1999 system of adjusting the gain for growth in CPI and applying the full marginal rate to the remainder. Alternatively, one could consider the simplified version we suggested in 2023, where the adjustment is 2.5% per year the asset is held – the midpoint of the RBA's inflation target – regardless of actual inflation over the holding period.

“Speculation about tax reform in the upcoming federal budget abounds.”

Applying a full marginal rate to an adjusted return still taxes mobile capital more lightly than other income, as economic theory would suggest. It has an advantage over the current system of not privileging capital gains-producing assets over income-producing assets at the margin. Because assets that can be leveraged are especially advantaged by the current system, switching back to the pre-1999 system or our simplified alternative would also promote financial stability. It would increase the effective tax rate on capital gains during booms in real asset prices, and our simplified proposal would also lean against periods of high CPI inflation.

What it will not do, though, is necessarily boost revenue. If asset prices rise by less than 5% per year, revenue is lower. For example, a 4% rise, less 2.5% deduction, means tax is paid on 1½% of capital gains. The current system of half the marginal rate on the full gain would be the equivalent of taxing 2% of gains if asset prices rose 4%/yr. Revenue is only higher than the current scheme if asset prices rise by more than 5%. And even in that case, the increase in revenue might only be small once people have adjusted to the change and the other possible design decisions associated with it, such as grandfathering and limits on the number and type of assets eligible for the discount.

Absent from the current discourse is any discussion of the proper role and size of government, or the level of government that is best placed to take on the functions required. As Westpac Economics colleague Pat Bustamante has previously shown, the size of government in Australia has increased ► substantially over the past decade. When private demand indirectly induced by public spending is included (think legal work for construction companies working on public infrastructure projects), the footprint of public demand has risen from 27% to 35% of GDP over the past decade.

Much of this expansion is desirable. We should want to care for disabled and elderly Australians properly and have high-quality childcare available at an affordable price. That takes resources, and private markets alone are unlikely to deliver enough of these services. Likewise, with population growth running around 1½%, both pre-pandemic and currently, we will always need more public infrastructure. Both types of spending also have positive spillovers. Social care spending allows those who were providing informal care to enter paid employment. And done well, infrastructure spending can boost skills and productivity and open up new opportunities through better logistics.

The question of what should or will happen in the budget boils down to which of the many possible objectives government wants to prioritise. Is it addressing the growing income tax burden in a system of fixed tax brackets, or minimising the deficit, or making the tax system more responsive to the economic cycle, or providing more services to meet the public's expectations, or doing so more efficiently? What about national and economic security? The budget is a complex beast and different design decisions can address different objectives. This is not like monetary policy, where there is only one instrument and at most two objectives, inflation and full employment, which are in any case correlated at least some of the time.

Global economic and geopolitical developments pose challenges, while new technology and an expanding, ageing workforce create opportunities. We should not assume that tweaking the tax system is the answer to every issue. Your fiscal priorities should relate to your public policy objectives.

Cliff Notes: Middle East conflict seemingly at an impasse

Elliot Clarke, Head of International Economics
Illiana Jain, Economist

Regarding the Middle East conflict, the week began with the expectation of a second round of in-person talks between the US and Iran. The start of the negotiations was initially pushed from Tuesday to Wednesday; but President Trump then announced on Truth Social that the meeting had been postponed at the request of Pakistani and Iranian officials to allow time for a "unified proposal" to be developed to be put to the US. Thankfully, having been stretched by both sides at the weekend, the expiring two-week ceasefire was extended indefinitely.

Since Wednesday, there has been no concrete evidence of progress towards a deal, the Iranians seemingly refusing to come to the table while the US' blockade remains in place, and the US refusing to end the blockade until a deal is agreed. Both sides have halted and seized ships within their area of operations, but this has not triggered a ceasefire breach – although it must be noted that President Trump overnight ordered the US Navy to strike any vessel laying mines in the Strait of Hormuz, making clear the risk of further military conflict.

With no clear way out of the stalemate, or timeline for formal talks, the price of Brent oil has rebounded back to around USD106 having (very briefly) fallen as low as USD86 late last week. The longer the impasse persists, the greater the chance of a sustained period of high oil prices and refinery margins, with all costs eventually met by businesses and households across the world.

Central banks remain focused on the degree and persistence of price passthrough to domestic consumer inflation, the risk being that inflation persists well above target into 2027 on second-round effects and an uplift in inflation expectations. ECB President Lagarde this week noted that the staff currently view conditions in the Euro Area as between their baseline and adverse projections from the last meeting, and will act "as the situation demands" ahead. Next week's run of central bank meetings across the northern hemisphere will provide a more detailed view on the balance of risks and the implications for monetary policy across the developed world.

In the US meanwhile, President Trump's pick for the next FOMC Chair, Kevin Warsh, appeared before the Senate Banking Committee as part of the confirmation process. Warsh again made clear he believes several aspects of the FOMC's communications and processes should change, but also showed a clear commitment to central bank independence. The next steps in Warsh's confirmation remains highly uncertain, with Republican Senator Tillis refusing to approve the appointment at the Committee stage until the Department of Justice close their investigation into the Federal Reserve and Chair Powell. If Senator Tillis holds out until year end, the Administration may face an additional challenge in 2027 as their Senate majority is at risk in the mid-term election. Chair Powell will remain in place in the interim, giving the FOMC continuity and capacity to manage the US economy.

On data front this week, US retail sales rose 1.7% in March, beating expectations. The control group, which feeds into GDP, also surprised to the upside, 0.7%. For the quarter overall, however, the consumer pulse has been weak, and record-low confidence points to downside risks for Q2. The outlook for US business investment is also increasingly uncertain.

Across the pond, the UK unemployment rate fell from 5.2% in January to 4.9% in February, though this reflected a decline in participation. Despite the softer labour market print, wages still rose 3.8%yr in February. A spike in energy prices also saw inflation rise 0.7% in March and 3.3% over the year. While the headlines focus on energy prices, sticky services inflation also remains an issue for the UK, 4.5%yr.

Our latest Market Outlook provides an in-depth view of the outlook for the US, Europe, China and global financial markets.

A matter of balance

Satish Ranchhod
Senior Economist

The conflict in the Middle East has cast a long shadow across the New Zealand economy, with a softening in demand, rising costs and winding back of plans for hiring. Inflation is already at elevated levels and it's set to take a large step higher over the next few months. All of this leaves the RBNZ with a particularly challenging balancing act. But while there are questions about how quickly the RBNZ will adjust the OCR, the direction of those movements will be upwards.

Curtain raiser

The latest CPI report showed that, even before the full impact of the recent oil price shock has been felt, New Zealand inflation was running hotter than we or the RBNZ expected. Consumer prices rose 0.9% in the March quarter. That saw the annual inflation rate remaining unchanged at 3.1%, above both our forecast and the RBNZ's April expectations.

The March quarter did see a large seasonal increase in food prices (1.5%). More important, however, were the large increases in transport costs. The sharp rise in global oil prices since late February left petrol prices up 3.5% over the quarter, with diesel prices up 11%. Notably, we also saw the early stages of spillovers from those high fuel prices into other costs, with domestic airfares up 9% over the quarter.

Looking under the surface, the various measures of core inflation provided some mixed messages on how strong the underlying inflation pulse has been. Some closely-watched measures of core inflation remain elevated. For instance, CPI ex-fuel and food came in at 3.0%yr (vs 2.9% previously). Similarly, the RBNZ's sectoral measure of core inflation held firm at 2.7%yr in the March quarter. However, other measures of core inflation, such as the trimmed mean and weighted median measures or those measures that exclude government charges, have been softer.

While not every measure of core inflation is running red hot, what stands out is that inflation in New Zealand hasn't fallen to 'low' levels over the past year. That's despite weak growth and a soft labour market. Part of the reason for that is because we have continued to see large increases in administered costs (like council rates and electricity charges) that aren't very responsive to changes in interest rates. But we are also seeing pressures in some other areas. This lingering firmness in overall inflation is significant for the RBNZ, highlighting the limited headroom they had even before the recent oil price shock.

Consumer prices and core inflation

The worst is yet to come

The March quarter inflation result was really just the curtain raiser. Inflation is set to rise sharply through the middle part of this year as the full impact of recent oil price rises ripples through the economy. We also expect to see continued firmness in administered prices, like council rates and electricity charges.

However, the outlook for inflation is much cloudier when we look at price pressures in more cyclical parts of the economy. That was highlighted in the latest Quarterly Survey of Business Opinion, and in our own recent discussions with businesses across the country.

Businesses have highlighted significant pressure on operating costs. And that pressure has not been limited to fuel and transport prices, with more widespread disruptions to supply chains. In some cases, like in the building sector, the reported increases in materials costs have been large.

At the same time, businesses have reported that much of the firming in economic momentum that we saw in the early part of the year has now been derailed. Economic confidence has dropped sharply over the past month, and the dampening impacts of the Middle East conflict on demand are becoming more visible. We've already seen tourist operators reporting an increase in cancelled bookings, and businesses across the country are reporting softness in discretionary spending as households grapple with rising costs for essentials.

Looking ahead, businesses across the economy are bracing themselves for softer trading conditions over the next few months. That's seen them winding back their plans for capex and hiring.

That softness in demand is raising questions about whether businesses can pass increases in operating costs through to output prices. At this stage, that passthrough has not been complete, with many businesses reporting increased pressure on margins. But that can't continue indefinitely. Many businesses have already seen their margins being squeezed for several years now, and they are now facing further (and in some cases very large) increases in operating costs. Against that backdrop, while softness in demand might limit the extent of output price rises over the coming months, inflation still looks set to take a sizeable step higher.

Putting that mix of soft demand and significant increases in operating costs together, we now expect that inflation will rise to 4.5% in mid-2026 (up from our previous forecast for 4.3%yr). Further ahead, inflation is expected to ease only gradually, slowing to 4.1% by the end of this year.

Headline inflation is expected to slow materially over 2027 as the impact of earlier oil price increases dissipates. However, core inflation is expected to remain elevated this year, and is expected to ease back towards the mid-point of the RBNZ's target band only gradually over 2027, rather than falling to low levels.

The outlook for inflation remains murky, particularly beyond the current quarter. Crucially, the outlook will be highly dependent on the evolution of tensions in the Middle East and the related (potentially large) moves in oil prices. But even if tensions in the Middle East were to dissipate quickly, the associated disruptions to supply chains and pressure on operating costs would still take some time to ease.

CPI inflation forecasts

Balancing act

All of this leaves the RBNZ with a particularly challenging balancing act. The RBNZ can't offset the rise in oil prices that's already occurred by hiking the OCR now. However, business surveys are pointing to a broadening lift in price pressures, and the RBNZ can't ignore the risk that the current oil-related rise in operating costs evolves into a more widespread and protracted lift in inflation. The past few years have shown just how corrosive and long-lasting the effects of high inflation can be for the economy, and the RBNZ is loath to see those sorts of pressures taking hold again.

Earlier interest rate hikes might help limit the risk that we see a more sustained rise in inflation. However, the RBNZ is also very mindful that higher interest rates now would weigh on economic activity at a time when the labour market is already soft.

This isn't an easy trade-off for the RBNZ. Balancing those concerns, we expect that the RBNZ will begin a series of increases in the Official Cash Rate from September, earlier than they previously signalled in their last published forecasts from February (which pre-dated the Middle East conflict). We expect the OCR will rise from the current low of 2.25% to 3.50% in early 2027. While that would be a relatively fast rise in the OCR, it would only take the OCR back around 'neutral' levels from the RBNZ's perspective at a time when inflation has been persistently above 3%.

Further ahead, the outlook is less certain. As a result, we expect that interest rates will continue to rise, but at a more gradual pace.

Market pricing for the OCR has been pulled forward in recent weeks and is now consistent with the first hike coming in July. We certainly wouldn't rule out an earlier start to the tightening cycle, given the significant rise in cost pressures. However, we think the RBNZ will prefer to wait to see how pricing behaviour in the economy is shaping up. While we will have a number of business surveys and monthly prices updates by the time of the July policy meeting, we won't have the full June quarter CPI report until after that meeting. (In contrast to the monthly price updates from Stats NZ, the quarterly CPI report has broader coverage including a range of discretionary spending categories. That update will help to illustrate how the balance between higher costs and softer demand is evolving in terms of overall pricing pressures.) The RBNZ will also want to see how spending and the labour market are evolving, both of which will be important for determining how persistent the strength in inflation will be.

Fiscal pressures

The other news of note this week was Moody's decision to attach a negative outlook to New Zealand's sovereign credit rating. The current top-tier "Aaa" rating – shared with just ten other countries – has been in place since October 2002 and is a notch higher than the rating currently assigned by both Standard and Poor's and Fitch (the latter also moved its rating to a negative outlook last month). It is worth noting that Moody's base model assigns a rating one notch lower, with the current Aaa rating reflecting a one-notch uplift based on an assessment that the recent weakening of fiscal metrics would improve over time. This week's action clearly indicates that Moody's are considering removing that uplift. Specifically, Moody's stated: "The negative outlook reflects our assessment that risks to New Zealand's fiscal trajectory have increased..." due to "...the potential for a combination of tighter monetary policy, slower short-term growth and increased debt servicing costs".

Following this ratings action, the Minister of Finance, Nicola Willis, held a press briefing at which she also outlined some economic scenarios that the Treasury had produced during its preparations for the upcoming Budget on 28 May. Willis stated that the ratings action reinforced the Government's decision to resist the temptation to "splash the cash" in reaction to the current oil shock. Importantly, she reaffirmed that the operating allowance for new initiatives in the upcoming Budget will be held at a relatively frugal $2.4bn. This will necessitate savings and reprioritisations to fund the targeted relief that the Government has already provided to lower income workers and some other groups, as well as the other pressures on operating spending that flow from higher fuel prices.

Unsurprisingly, the information presented by Willis showed that an upgrade to the outlook for growth and employment had been the base case prior to the Middle East conflict. More surprisingly, the least severe post-war scenario presented – one based on crude oil remaining around $110/bbl in the near-term – was associated with a growth outlook that was similar to that presented in the Half-Year update in December. This scenario, which Willis seemed to indicate might be most representative of the current outlook, would likely still lead to a modest deterioration in the near-term fiscal outlook due to increases in spending that sit outside the spending allowance, such as benefit costs (which are indexed to the CPI) and debt servicing. However, it would probably not generate a repeat of the very large upgrades to the borrowing programme that have been seen at various times in recent years.

We will publish our preview of Budget 2026 after we have seen the Government's financial accounts for April (released 12 May). Willis indicated that the Treasury had finalised its economic forecasts this week and that Cabinet would make final Budget decisions in around a fortnight.

AUS: Q1 Headline CPI (%qtr)

Apr 29, Last: 0.6, Westpac f/c: 1.5
Market f/c: 1.4, Range: 1.1 to 1.6

Westpac is estimating a 1.5%qtr/4.2%yr gain in the March quarter CPI. At two decimal places our estimate is a solid 1.48% so we see the risks as balanced.

The Middle East conflict is the largest energy shock since the oil crises of the 1970s/80s. It started February 28 so its impact was only felt through March, mostly via auto fuel. As such we expect a much broader impact in the June quarter and through the second half of the year. For more details on the scenario underpinning these projections, and our latest thoughts on the risks, please refer to the April Market Outlook.

For a detailed breakdown of our June quarter estimates, and the monthly estimates to May, see our Inflation Outlook Bulletin.

Headline inflation in three series

AUS: Q1 Trimmed Mean CPI (%qtr)

Apr 29, Last: 0.9, Westpac f/c: 0.9
Market f/c: 0.9, Range: 0.8 to 1.0

Core inflation is not immune to the Middle East Crisis. While the impact is likely to be more significant through the second half of the year we are expecting a 0.93% increase in the March quarter, matching the 0.90% December quarter gain. The annual pace is expected to lift modestly to 3.5%yr from 3.4%yr.

The March quarter is a prelude to the step up in the pace with a 1.0% increase in the June and September quarters and the annual pace peaking at 4.0%yr in the second half of the year.

The ABS are publishing the quarterly underlying inflation measures consistent with the historical price collection frequency. Replicating this process represents a small downside risk to our estimate.

AUS: Mar Private Sector Credit (%mth)

Apr 30, Last: 0.6 Westpac f/c: 0.5
Market f/c: 0.6, Range: 0.5 to 0.7

Private sector credit rose 0.8% mth in December, eased to 0.5% mth in January, and then steadied at 0.6% mth in February, in line with the two-year average.

For March, headline growth is expected to moderate to 0.5% mth. The effects of the RBA's cash rate increases in February and March are likely to emerge with a lag, although interest rate expectations rose earlier. In addition, the global energy price shock associated with the war in the Middle East is placing further pressure on household budgets and disrupting business activity. With both consumer sentiment and business confidence falling sharply in March, credit growth is likely to face increasing downward pressure, amid heightened economic uncertainty.

Private Sector Credit Growth

AUS: Apr Cotality Home Value Index (%mth)

May 1, Last: 0.6, Westpac f/c: 0.3

The Cotality home value index rose 0.6% in March, following similar gains over the previous three months, annual growth holding broadly steady at 9.3%yr. The detail continued to show slight price declines in Sydney and Melbourne, where turnover also looks to be pulling back, but relatively strong price gains in Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth where turnover remains firmer.

The daily measure points to a slower 0.3% rise for the April month with slightly more pronounced declines in Sydney and Melbourne and price gains moderating a touch in the mid-sized capitals.

NZ: Mar Monthly Employment Indicator (%mth)

Apr 28, Last: 0.3, Westpac f/c: flat

The February MEI added to the evidence that the New Zealand economy was regaining momentum prior to the Iran war. The number of filled jobs rose by 0.3%, although this is likely to be revised down a little in subsequent releases; the broader picture is one of a stabilisation in jobs in recent months after declining through 2024-25. The weekly snapshots provided by Stats NZ are now running about in line with a year ago, which suggests a flattish outcome for the March month. We'll be watching these figures closely for any signs that the uncertainty stemming from the Iran war is prompting businesses to put off hiring decisions.

Monthly Employment Indicator

NZ: Apr ANZ Business Confidence (index)

Apr 30, Last: 32.5

The first business survey since the beginning of the Iran war saw a sharp drop in confidence, with late-March responses turning significantly weaker than earlier ones as the gravity of the situation became clearer. That sets the stage for an April survey that's likely to look quite ugly on the whole, even if there is some improvement within the month as the 8 April ceasefire helped to bring fuel prices down from their highs. Firms' inflation expectations and pricing intentions are likely to take a further step up, but the measures of wage growth and hiring intentions will also be an important consideration as to whether we see a sustained rise in inflation beyond the initial spike.

Business confidence high prior to Iran conflict

NZ: Mar Building Consents (%mth)

May 1, Last: 2.7, Westpac f/c: flat

Since late 2025, dwelling consent numbers have taken a step higher, and we expect that issuance will remain firm in March. That would see annual consent numbers climbing to around 37,800 – its highest level since 2023. Developers have been bringing new projects to market, supported by last year's reductions in interest costs and the earlier easing in cost pressures. However, those gains pre-date the recent conflict in the Middle East. Builders are now reporting significant increases in materials costs and pressure on interest rates is mounting. That's likely to see fewer new projects coming to market over the coming months, and some planned work may not proceed. Commercial consent numbers have been mixed across segments to date. But across all segments, the risks are now tilted towards greater caution in businesses' plans for capex in the near term.

Building consents picking up

US: FOMC Policy Decision (%)

Apr 28-29, Last: 3.625, Market f/c: 3.625, Westpac f/c: 3.625

The FOMC received a reprieve from downside risks to the economy over the past month as nonfarm payrolls growth turned up after an extended period of weakness.

The deceleration in GDP growth evident in Q4 and expected in Q1 notwithstanding (see below), the focus of FOMC risk analysis is likely to be the threat of elevated inflation. The latest CPI report was favourable, with inflationary pressures concentrated in energy prices and core inflation benign. However, if a deal between the US and Iran is not forthcoming, this situation could change rapidly.

We expect the Committee to note concerns over passthrough, but to hold a balanced view overall, waiting for data to show the evolution of risks in coming months.

Passthrough risk the near-term concern

US: Q1 GDP (%ann'd)

Apr 30, Last: 0.5, Market f/c: 2.0, Westpac f/c: 1.0

US GDP decelerated abruptly at the end of 2025 following strong growth through mid year, and under the weight of the Federal Government shutdown and tariff uncertainty. Partially available for Q1 2026 point to another poor result as the new year begins.

In part this looks to be due to net exports subtracting materially from growth in the three months to March. Though housing investment seems to be contracting, and household consumption and business investment growth is below trend. With consumer sentiment at record lows, US GDP growth is susceptible to remaining below trend through Q2 and Q3, potentially seeing additional slack build in the labour market.

United States contributions to GDP

Japan: BoJ Policy Decision (%)

Apr 27, Last: 0.75, Market f/c: 0.75, Westpac f/c: 0.75

We anticipate the Bank of Japan will remain on hold at its April meeting but signal that further rate rises are on the horizon. A fresh set of forecasts should show inflation is on track to be higher given higher costs of energy and still elevated food prices.

The Policy Board is focused on creating the right conditions for domestically-driven inflation. They will want to be patient to ensure financial conditions remain sufficiently accommodative for the corporate sector to continue to raise wages and invest while balancing the impact a weak yen has on domestic inflation. We continue to anticipate a June hike.

Real wage gains still key for BoJ

Speculation about tax reform in the upcoming federal budget abounds. That presumes a lot about the problems the budget should solve and whether the tax system is the right solution.

- Pre-budget speculation has tended to start from the presumption that more revenue is needed. The justification is sometimes the perceived need to fund spending priorities that are assumed – perhaps erroneously – to be rising. In other quarters, minimising the deficit or government debt appears to be the objective. Whatever the objective, it should be scrutinised not assumed.

- Speculation about changes to the capital gains tax (CGT) regime highlight the potential to increase revenue, but there is no guarantee of this. For example, switching back to the pre-1999 regime or the simplified version of it we have previously suggested will only boost revenue if asset price growth exceeds 5%.
- There are many possible objectives that fiscal systems – tax and spending – can address, often different objectives in different parts of the system. “Boost revenue” is not the only possible goal, and tweaking the tax system is not the only solution to a policy objective.

Speculation is building as budget night approaches. While the government must deal with the immediate issues in front of it stemming from the Middle East conflict, many observers are focused on the maxim “never let a good crisis go to waste” and hoping for broader reforms – usually the same ones they were advocating before the conflict erupted. The question of what the budget should do rests, however, on the deeper question of what problems the government is trying to solve.

For example, recent discussion has been focused on an assumed need for extra revenue. Tax reforms are dissected for how much more they might raise, while revenue windfalls from higher commodity prices are downplayed. Underlying this view are other presumptions – seemingly widespread across different levels of government and the bureaucracy – that “people expect more from government nowadays” and that governments should strive to meet those expectations. Absent from these discussions are the questions of whether the government’s effort and resources are being deployed effectively, and whether it can stop doing some things altogether.

A related presumption underlying the search for more revenue is the belief that population ageing is shrinking the workforce, even though this is not true in Australia and most other advanced economies outside North America.

A separate pathway to the search for more revenue comes from a different premise: that the federal fiscal position is weak and large revenue measures (and/or spending cuts) must be found to reduce the deficit significantly. It is good to have strong public finances. It keeps government borrowing costs low and leaves plenty of space to spend in a crisis. Yet the presumption that government finances are parlous and in need of repair sits oddly with Australia’s actual federal fiscal position, which is stronger than many of its peers.

Take the recent speculation about removing the CGT discount. It has been touted as a revenue-raising measure, but there is no guarantee of this. One could consider moving back to the pre-1999 system of adjusting the gain for growth in CPI and applying the full marginal rate to the remainder. Alternatively, one could consider the simplified version we suggested in 2023, where the adjustment is 2.5% per year the asset is held – the midpoint of the RBA’s inflation target – regardless of actual inflation over the holding period.

Applying a full marginal rate to an adjusted return still taxes mobile capital more lightly than other income, as economic theory would suggest. It has an advantage over the current system of not privileging capital gains-producing assets over income-producing assets at the margin. Because assets that can be leveraged are especially advantaged by the current system, switching back to the pre-1999 system or our simplified alternative would also promote financial stability. It would increase the effective tax rate on capital gains during booms in real asset prices, and our simplified proposal would also lean against periods of high CPI inflation.

What it will not do, though, is necessarily boost revenue. If asset prices rise by less than 5% per year, revenue is lower. For example, a 4% rise, less 2.5% deduction, means tax is paid on 1½% of capital gains. The current system of half the marginal rate on the full gain would be the equivalent of taxing 2% of gains if asset prices rose 4%/yr. Revenue is only higher than the current scheme if asset prices rise by more than 5%. And even in that case, the increase in revenue might only be small once people have adjusted to the change and the other possible design decisions associated with it, such as grandfathering and limits on the number and type of assets eligible for the discount.

Absent from the current discourse is any discussion of the proper role and size of government, or the level of government that is best placed to take on the functions required. As Westpac Economics colleague Pat Bustamante has previously shown, the size of government in Australia has increased substantially over the past decade. When private demand indirectly induced by public spending is included (think legal work for construction companies working on public infrastructure projects), the footprint of public demand has risen from 27% to 35% of GDP over the past decade.

Much of this expansion is desirable. We should want to care for disabled and elderly Australians properly and have high-quality childcare available at an affordable price. That takes resources, and private markets alone are unlikely to deliver enough of these services. Likewise, with population growth running around 1½%, both pre-pandemic and currently, we will always need more public infrastructure. Both types of spending also have positive spillovers. Social care spending allows those who were providing informal care to enter paid employment. And done well, infrastructure spending can boost skills and productivity and open up new opportunities through better logistics.

The question of what should or will happen in the budget boils down to which of the many possible objectives government wants to prioritise. Is it addressing the growing income tax burden in a system of fixed tax brackets, or minimising the deficit, or making the tax system more responsive to the economic cycle, or providing more services to meet the public's expectations, or doing so more efficiently? What about national and economic security? The budget is a complex beast and different design decisions can address different objectives. This is not like monetary policy, where there is only one instrument and at most two objectives, inflation and full employment, which are in any case correlated at least some of the time.

Global economic and geopolitical developments pose challenges, while new technology and an expanding, ageing workforce create opportunities. We should not assume that tweaking the tax system is the answer to every issue. Your fiscal priorities should relate to your public policy objectives.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Key insights from the week that was.

The first detailed look at the mindset of Australian consumers and businesses amidst the Middle East conflict proved sobering. Our Westpac-MI Consumer Sentiment Index posted its largest fall since COVID-19, down 12.5% to a deeply pessimistic reading of 80.1. The impact from the surge in fuel prices was acute, leading to a more pronounced deterioration in the sub-indexes tracking current conditions – namely ‘family finances vs a year ago’ (–16.7%) and ‘time to buy a major household item’

(−15.0%). There were also significant hits to the year-ahead outlook for family finances (−13.9%) and the economy (−12.4%), suggesting households are bracing for enduring pressure.

The tone of the March NAB business survey was no better, business confidence collapsing 29pts from a neutral reading in February. This came alongside a notable lift in purchase cost pressures, up 1.7ppts to a quarterly pace of 3.0%. That final producer prices lifted +0.4ppts emphasises the rapid pass-through of surging fuel costs, but also that businesses are currently absorbing most of the increase in costs via margins, impacting profitability. Note though, the readings for current trading conditions and employment were positive, enabling business conditions to hold around its long-run average. This suggests the underlying health of the economy can be maintained if risks subside quickly.

This week we also received the March Labour Force Survey. It showed the Australian labour market was in good health prior to the Middle East conflict and the RBA's most recent rate hike. Employment growth continued to strengthen from its trough in March, from 1.0%yr to 1.5%yr on a three-month average basis, reflecting the economy's momentum through the second half of 2025 and into 2026. The unemployment rate has also held at 4.3% over the past two months, a similar level to the second half of last year. It now looks increasingly like the 4.1% prints at the turn of the year were due to temporary weakness in participation, not a sustained re-tightening.

However, given the hit to business confidence and the expectation of further policy tightening, the Middle East conflict looks set to cast a long shadow over the labour market. We expect a combination of lower average hours worked and slower employment growth, seeing the unemployment rate lift to 5.0% in early 2027. Tracking industries most exposed to the fuel shock will provide an initial take on the scale of the impact. Manufacturing, construction, transport/logistics and travel/tourism are the sectors to watch.

Offshore, an abrupt end to the first round of in-person talks between the US and Iran and the US' Navy's subsequent blockade of Iranian ports and associated vessels was the main point of conversation for markets this week. The market's take has been sanguine, the price of Brent oil retreating below US$100 and global equities rallying back to historic highs during the week. Comments made by both sides imply negotiations are ongoing and another round of in-person talks will occur before the two-week ceasefire ends in coming days. There is also the option to extend the ceasefire, if necessary.

Effectively cut off from global shipping, Iran's need for a deal is clear. But arguably this is also the case for the US economy, University of Michigan consumer sentiment falling to a record low this week, 43% below the average of the survey since 1978. Price pressures are currently limited to first-order effects, headline CPI inflation printing at 0.9% against a core reading of just 0.2% in March; but, should the conflict persist, it is highly likely second-round effects will permeate through the US economy, materially increasing the likelihood of inflation holding well above target and term interest rates trending higher. FOMC members who spoke this week all showed confidence in the underlying health of the US economy but also concern over the potential for an lasting imbalance between growth and inflation.

In contrast, China's economy showed strength this week, annual GDP growth accelerated from 4.5%yr in Q4 2025 to 5.0%yr in Q1, matching the full-year outcome for 2025. From the monthly partial data,

China's Q1 momentum was principally due to the strength of exporters and associated investment, both of which are likely to receive a lasting boost from increased demand for green technology given the Middle East's impact on energy prices and supply. There is reason for guarded optimism over the outlook for property investment as well, the year-to-date decline having moderated from -17%ytd at December to -11%ytd in February and March. Still equivalent to circa 15% of GDP, an end to the sharp construction declines of recent years would provide a material boost to aggregate growth through 2026.

External demand and investment's support for GDP masks the still-troubled state of consumer demand, however. Having surprised to the upside in February at 2.8%ytd, in March retail sales growth slowed once again to 2.4%ytd. While not a disastrous outcome by any means, it is less than half the average pace of the past five years post pandemic, a historically weak period for household demand growth. Policy makers have been clear in their intent to provide additional support to households but are yet to action plans. And, while equities have risen through the year, house prices continue to decline, weighing on wealth and sentiment. Without broadening the growth pulse, aggregate momentum will remain susceptible to slipping towards, or through, 4.0% in coming years, even with a significant benefit from global demand for green technology.

A full update of our expectations and assessment of risks for the global economy and markets will be made available today in the April edition of Market Outlook on Westpac IQ.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

A crude shock, surcharges may change expectations

Justin Smirk
Senior Economist

A materially bigger and more persistent shock ...

As noted in our Middle East Crisis Update, a prolonged disruption in the Gulf is sustaining higher energy prices. We now have Brent averaging around US$120/bbl in the June quarter. This is based on our assessment of unfolding infrastructure damage and a slow recovery in shipping traffic through the Strait of Hormuz.

So despite the announced cut in fuel excise, we expect CPI inflation to peak at 5.4%yr in the June quarter, while the monthly measure, which the ABS highlights as the main indicator and can be significantly more volatile than the quarterly series, may peak close to 6%yr in May.

Westpac expects core inflation, as measured by the quarterly Trimmed Mean, peaking around 4% in the second half of year; food, household services and even new dwelling prices, alongside broader non-energy pass-through, are key risks to our estimates. We also note that the monthly TM spikes a bit faster hitting a 4.0%yr pace by June.

In response, the RBA is now expected to deliver three rate hikes (May, June, August), taking the cash rate to a peak of 4.85%. As the combined supply shock and tighter policy weigh on demand, GDP growth is expected to trough at 1%yr in 2027 while unemployment peaks around 5% at end 2026. A deeper dive into these issues are summarised in the video by the Westpac Economics Team led by Luci Ellis "Longer conflict, higher inflation and cash rate"

This was, of course, before the announcement of a two-week ceasefire on the 8th of April (Asian time). This is obviously welcome and a positive risk scenario relative to the baseline we outlined last week and underpins our current inflation forecasts. Should the ceasefire hold – and that is a big if – a faster opening up of the Strait of Hormuz would result in energy prices tracking between the profile we currently have and the one underpinning the forecasts in the March.

Market Outlook (which was based on a one-month closure of the Strait with little infrastructure damage). For further background on the unfolding risks to our current scenario see Luci Ellis's note "On hoping you are wrong".

In this bulletin we also release a forward profile of the Monthly CPI. This process is still at a preliminary stage but given the extreme surge we expect to see in the Monthly CPI, we thought it would be timely to provide some guidance out to December 2026.

March and April headline CPI set to surge

The Israel/US assault on Iran began in the morning of the 28th of February. We expect the resulting surge in oil prices to have the largest hit to the CPI in the months of March and April before flattening out in May and June. Auto fuel is set to increase again in July but this is due to the expiration of the recent temporary reduction in fuel excise.

Westpac is forecasting a 1.3% increase in March on the back of a 35% increase in auto fuel. At two decimal points the increase is 1.26% but we warn that given the current volatility in prices, there is a greater than usual degree of uncertainty so these finer estimates should be used with even more caution than usual.

The annual pace lifts from 3.7%yr to 4.7%yr in March.

Our current scenario has auto fuel lifting a further 2% and 6% respectively in April and May. The April CPI will also be boosted by a seasonal bounce in clothing & footwear and holiday travel & accommodation plus the annual increase in health insurance premiums. The annual pace of CPI inflation is expected to peak at 5.8%yr in May (so there is a risk it could peak as high as 6%yr) and then slowly moderate to 4.7%yr by December 2026.

Core inflation is higher for longer

We estimate a 0.23%mth rise in the Monthly Trimmed Mean (TM) in March holding the annual pace steady at 3.3%yr. The six-month annualised pace is also steady at 3.3%yr which down from a 3.7%yr pace in December. We were expecting the pace of core inflation to moderate from here but with the conflict in Iran disrupting shipping out of the Gulf, and the resulting surge in fuel prices, we now see fuel prices remaining higher for longer resulting in a greater degree of pass-through to core inflation.

The TM is set to lift 0.5%mth/3.6%yr in April, 0.4%mth/3.8%yr in May and 0.3%mth/4.0%yr in June. The forecast peak in the annual TM inflation is 4.0%yr in June then holding between 3.9%yr and 4.0%yr to year end; in six-month annualised terms the peak pace is 4.6%yr in September.

Quarterly inflation less volatile

The Monthly CPI is the focus of the ABS CPI release, and as such, it gains the most media attention. However, at least for now given the short history of the complete Monthly CPI, the quarterly measures of inflation will remain the focus of both the RBA and the Australian government when setting both monetary and fiscal policy, particularly when it comes to core inflation as measured by the Trimmed Mean.

Middle East conflict forecast revisions

Oil price scenarios

Auto fuel prices

Pump price average for unleaded and diesel

As the current conflict started in the last week of February, we have only see one month of higher fuel prices so the auto fuel is expected to rise just 5.9% in the March quarter. However, starting from a high base in the June quarter means fuel prices to continue to rise solidly and we estimate a 24% surge in the fuel prices component in the June quarter.

Overall, we estimate a 1.5% increase in the March quarter taking the annual pace from 3.6%yr to 4.7%yr. As noted earlier, we expect this momentum to continue into the June quarter with a further 1.9% surge in the CPI taking the annual pace to 5.4%yr. While we think this should be the peak in the annual pace, it is nevertheless the fastest pace since June 2023 when it was reported to be 6.0%.

Core inflation is not immune to this boost as we are forecasting a 0.93% increase in the March quarter, matching the 0.9% increase in the December quarter and it is a prelude to the step up to a 1.0% increase in both the June and September quarters. This will see the annual pace peak at 4.0%yr in the second half of the year.

The Trimmed Mean estimate starts from a low of 0.2% to a high of 2.2%. Significant expenditure items trimmed off the bottom includes vegetables (–1.2%), international travel & accommodation (–0.7%) and other non-durable household products (–0.7%). Trimmed off the top are secondary education (2.3%), tobacco (2.4%), furniture (3.3%), women's garments (3.5%), auto fuel (5.9%), electricity (118.3%).

As we have noted in earlier bulletins, until the ABS has a better understanding of the seasonality of the new monthly CPI, they will continue publishing quarterly underlying inflation measures in a manner consistent with the history of price collection frequency. We have replicated this process and found it represents a small downside risk to our March quarter estimate but it still rounds to 0.9%qtr. As such we just note the risk and do not adjust our overall forecast.

Signs of faster pass-through

We have received many anecdotal reports of increases in input costs, often as a fuel surcharge or levy. Some of these were adjusted downwards when the Australian government cut the fuel excise but remain significant. We have also heard of restaurants, cafés and even hairdressers adding a fuel levy to prices but these are yet to be confirmed.

It has also been reported that rising input costs could add as much as 10%, or $50,000, to the cost of building an average detached home. Using input price increases as reported by Tradelink this estimate seems fair. Tradelink data suggests an average increase of 16% in April, the largest increase in the data we have back to January 2020; not all products will see price increases in any given month, but the number of notifications of price increases on the Tradelink website has also risen. The proposed average increase for May increases to 17% before easing back to around 7% in June and July so it will be interesting to see how these estimates are adjusted as actual prices are posted.

Forecasts are an assessment of the most likely outcome, not the preferred one. The ceasefire announcement was welcome, but whether it holds is highly uncertain.

- The economy does not care about your feelings, so forecasts must reflect what you think is the most likely outcome, not necessarily what you wish would happen. This distinction is especially salient

now. The outright fall in global fuel supply has different implications than other recent supply shocks, and the outlook for Australia and the world is rough.

- The ceasefire announced this week was obviously welcome, but the question is whether the Strait of Hormuz opens properly. The first 24 hours after the announcement were not promising. But if it does, that would be a better outcome than the baseline forecast update we released last week. We would be happy if our baseline forecast was wrong for this reason.
- The key issue for Australia, and for the domestic interest rate outlook, is how much of the energy price shock is already being passed through to prices of other goods and services. The RBA will be watching for this kind of behaviour, including through its liaison program, and will see it as a further leg up in underlying inflation from a rate that was already higher than desired.

The thing about forecasting is that your preferences do not matter. A baseline scenario is simply what you think is most likely. It is not necessarily what you wish would happen. And of course things could play out differently. It is the role of scenario and risk-sensitivity analysis to articulate these other possible future states of the world.

The disconnect between what you hope will happen and what you think will actually happen is especially salient now. The near-term outlook for Australia is tough: higher inflation, with consumers again squeezed by some combination of higher interest rates, lower income growth and higher unemployment. Things are even worse for many other countries. Australia has been able to leverage its LNG exports to ensure we have – so far – not been left short of other fuels. Many lower-income countries do not have this advantage and have been facing the prospect of shortages and rationing; some of our neighbours in the Pacific are particularly hard-hit.

The economic shock from the Gulf conflict centres on global oil and gas supply. It is different from COVID, when the disruptions were all the way down supply chains. It also differs from the energy shock following Russia's invasion of Ukraine, where the Russian oil and gas supply did not disappear, it just needed time to be redistributed to non-European nations willing to buy it despite the sanctions; the peak decline in its oil output was estimated to be around 3 million barrels per day, but the disruption faded quickly. This time around, the oil and gas are not getting out of the Persian Gulf. Some production has been redirected through Saudi pipelines to other ports, but not all of it. Current estimates are that the net reduction of global production has been 8–9 million barrels per day for oil and one-fifth of pre-war global supply for gas. And at the same time, Russia's output capacity has been reduced by successful Ukrainian attacks on Russian oil infrastructure; news reports suggest this has cut global output by a further 0.7–1 million barrels per day.

The effect on prices from such a cut to capacity was always going to be severe.

News this week that a two-week ceasefire had been agreed was obviously welcome. Assuming it holds well enough to reopen the Strait of Hormuz properly – a big if given the attacks in the 24 hours following its announcement – it would be a better outcome than the baseline update we released last week, and one of the “risks on both sides” we contemplated when we released it. A lasting ceasefire and faster opening up of the Strait would put energy prices on a trajectory between the one we contemplated in last week's baseline, and the one underpinning the forecasts in the March Market Outlook. A return to pre-war prices is unlikely in the short term, though, given the damage to oil and gas infrastructure in the Gulf states and in Russia.

Even if the ceasefire holds well enough that the Strait stays open, a key watchpoint is whether ships enter the Gulf during the next two weeks, not just whether those previously stuck there leave. If ships do not enter, the next wave of production will not be able to be shipped. Supply will sag again a few weeks later and prices will rebound, especially for refined product.

If the ceasefire does not hold, the reprieve on fuel supply will be brief. Trust between the parties is low and Iranian control of the Strait – even jointly with Oman – is an unstable equilibrium that is unacceptable to much of the rest of the world. Even if the ceasefire gets back on track after its rocky start, flare-ups later in the year cannot be ruled out.

The real question for Australia, and for the domestic interest rate outlook, is how much of the energy price shock is already being passed through to prices of other goods and services. On this there is less cause for optimism. While ‘temporary fuel levies’ are easier to unwind as fuel prices decline, for many products, list prices have been lifted significantly and a reversal seems less likely. Building materials are a particular issue, with the cost of building a detached home increasing as much as 10%, on our preliminary estimates. The lift in pricing has been widespread across industries and in some cases quite large relative to overall inflation trends. The RBA will be watching for this kind of behaviour, including through its liaison program, and will see it as a further leg up in underlying inflation from a rate that was already higher than desired.

Our next forecast round, scheduled for release next week, will contemplate both the case where traffic through the Strait remains disrupted and one where the ceasefire holds.

If the ceasefire does hold, downside risks to growth diminish and inflation risks ease. Because of the downstream pass-through to other prices we are already seeing, though, the inflation risks do not disappear and the RBA is still likely to raise the cash rate further. Still, it would be a better outcome than our current published baseline. This would be one of the instances where we would be quite happy to be wrong.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). 3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Key insights from the week that was.

Regarding the Middle East conflict, the week began with the expectation of a second round of in-person talks between the US and Iran. The start of the negotiations was initially pushed from Tuesday to Wednesday; but President Trump then announced on Truth Social that the meeting had been postponed at the request of Pakistani and Iranian officials to allow time for a "unified proposal" to be developed to be put to the US. Thankfully, having been stretched by both sides at the weekend, the expiring two-week ceasefire was extended indefinitely.

Since Wednesday, there has been no concrete evidence of progress towards a deal, the Iranians seemingly refusing to come to the table while the US' blockade remains in place, and the US refusing to end the blockade until a deal is agreed. Both sides have halted and seized ships within their area of operations, but this has not triggered a ceasefire breach – although it must be noted that President Trump overnight ordered the US Navy to strike any vessel laying mines in the Strait of Hormuz, making clear the risk of further military conflict.

With no clear way out of the stalemate, or timeline for formal talks, the price of Brent oil has rebounded back to around USD106 having (very briefly) fallen as low as USD86 late last week. The longer the impasse persists, the greater the chance of a sustained period of high oil prices and refinery margins, with all costs eventually met by businesses and households across the world.

Central banks remain focused on the degree and persistence of price passthrough to domestic consumer inflation, the risk being that inflation persists well above target into 2027 on second-round effects and an uplift in inflation expectations. ECB President Lagarde this week noted that the staff currently view conditions in the Euro Area as between their baseline and adverse projections from the last meeting, and will act “as the situation demands” ahead. Next week’s run of central bank meetings across the northern hemisphere will provide a more detailed view on the balance of risks and the implications for monetary policy across the developed world.

In the US meanwhile, President Trump’s pick for the next FOMC Chair, Kevin Warsh, appeared before the Senate Banking Committee as part of the confirmation process. Warsh again made clear he believes several aspects of the FOMC’s communications and processes should change, but also showed a clear commitment to central bank independence. The next steps in Warsh’s confirmation remains highly uncertain, with Republican Senator Tillis refusing to approve the appointment at the Committee stage until the Department of Justice close their investigation into the Federal Reserve and Chair Powell. If Senator Tillis holds out until year end, the Administration may face an additional challenge in 2027 as their Senate majority is at risk in the mid-term election. Chair Powell will remain in place in the interim, giving the FOMC continuity and capacity to manage the US economy.

On data front this week, US retail sales rose 1.7% in March, beating expectations. The control group, which feeds into GDP, also surprised to the upside, 0.7%. For the quarter overall, however, the consumer pulse has been weak, and record-low confidence points to downside risks for Q2. The outlook for US business investment is also increasingly uncertain. Across the pond, the UK unemployment rate fell from 5.2% in January to 4.9% in February, though this reflected a decline in participation. Despite the softer labour market print, wages still rose 3.8%yr in February. A spike in energy prices also saw inflation rise 0.7% in March and 3.3% over the year. While the headlines focus on energy prices, sticky services inflation also remains an issue for the UK, 4.5%yr.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

WESTPAC-MI LEADING INDEX BULLETIN

Latest insights into economic momentum

Key points

- Leading Index growth rate declines to -0.13% in March.
- First below-trend pace since August last year.
- Interest rates and global energy shock clearly impacting.

Westpac-MI Leading Index

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. The forecasts given above are predictive in character. Whilst every effort has been taken to ensure that the assumptions on which the forecasts are based are reasonable, the forecasts may be affected by incorrect assumptions or by known or unknown risks and uncertainties. The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.

Leading Index momentum dips back below trend

Matthew Hassan
Head of Australian Macro-Forecasting

The six-month annualised growth rate in the Westpac–Melbourne Institute Leading Index, which indicates the likely pace of economic activity relative to trend three to nine months into the future, declined to -0.13% in March from $+0.05\%$ in February.

The Australian economy has lost momentum over the first few months of the year with more weakness likely to emerge in the months ahead. The March Index already points to a period of below-trend growth over the remainder of 2026. While the growth pulse is not overly weak, it is the first below-trend read since August last year and, prior to that, since the extended period of weakness during the 'cost-of-living' crisis of 2022–2024.

The Leading Index growth rate has now swung from $+0.31\%$ in October last year to -0.15% currently, a 0.44ppt deterioration. The detail shows clear drags from the shifting interest rate backdrop and the global energy shock associated with the conflict in the Middle East.

Component-wise, the biggest negative shifts have come from: the Westpac–Melbourne Institute Consumer Expectations Index (a 20% drop over the last six months effectively taking 0.27ppts off the headline growth rate); a sharp sell-off in the Australian sharemarket in the March month (-0.24 ppts); and a flattening yield spread as short-term interest rates have moved higher (-0.15 ppts). Some of these declines may not be sustained though, with a notable recovery in sharemarket in the first three weeks of April. If it sustains, the move will be reflected in next month's index.

Roughly speaking, about 60% of the drag on the six month growth rate coming from these three components looks to be due to the conflict in the Middle East. All of sharemarket fall and about half of the sentiment decline since October has occurred after the conflict began. Most of the yield gap shift however can be attributed to monetary policy developments prior to the war.

Other components have provided partial offsets. Most notably, higher commodity prices (up 11.9% in Australian dollar terms over the last six months) have added 0.09ppts to the Index growth rate over the same period. Dwelling approvals have added a further 0.11ppts although this is likely being exaggerated by a very choppy monthly profile (approvals jumped 30% in February after dropping 20% through December–January). The contribution from the remaining three components has seen no net change since October.

The Westpac–Melbourne Institute Leading Index of Economic Activity is designed to assist in identifying turning points in the economy. The index combines variables that reflect different aspects of the economy into a single index that generally produces a more reliable cyclical indicator than any single component taken individually. The Leading Index of Economic Activity provides advance information on the state of the economy and gives early warnings of cyclical turning points.

The Reserve Bank Monetary Policy Board (MPB) next meets on May 4–5. The latest Leading Index update confirms that higher interest rates and the spike in fuel prices associated with the conflict in the Middle East are starting to weigh on growth momentum, albeit fairly mildly. However, the MPB's main concerns are likely to be around inflation with underlying measures already above the RBA's 2–3% target range and set to move higher as the effects of energy price rises come through. On balance we expect the risk of this feeding into a lift in inflation expectations will over-ride the downside risks to growth. As such, we expect the MPB to raise the cash rate by another 25bps in May with further moves likely in subsequent months.

WESTPAC NOWCAST Q1 2026: SECOND ESTIMATE

The cyclical upswing is maturing

Key points

- Consistent with our first estimate, Westpac Now points to GDP growth of around 0.6%qtr in Q1 2026 (range: 0.55–0.75%qtr), lifting year ended growth to 2.8%yr.
- Our monthly activity index edged lower in March after moving sideways through January and February. Overall, activity was flat across the March quarter, ending an upswing that began in May 2025 even before the recent tightening in monetary policy could take effect.
- Recent sharp falls in consumer and business confidence were largely ‘looked through’; our framework would take more signal from a sustained drop.
- While growth appear to have remained resilient in Q1, a prolonged Middle East conflict increases the risk that weak confidence spills over into a broader set of indicators (many of which have already softened), exacerbating supply chain dislocations and lower real incomes.

*Dotted line show Westpac-Now central estimates. Quarter ahead (or Q1 2026) relies on the actual Westpac monthly activity index to March 2026. Beyond the quarter ahead, estimates rely on projections of the Westpac monthly activity index generated using internal model dynamics. Confidence intervals reflect empirical out of sample forecasting errors.

- Our framework suggests growth will ease to around 0.5%qtr in Q2, before returning to 0.6%qtr in Q3 2026, but these estimates by design do not allow for the wider effect of the conflict and differ from our actual GDP forecasts.
- Westpac Now updates are released monthly, with details in Appendix A.

The Upswing Is Maturing, Even Before Rate Hikes Bite

Pat Bustamante
Senior Economist

In November 2025, we introduced Westpac-Now, a real time measure of current activity in the Australian economy. Westpac-Now draws on more than 60 high frequency economic and financial variables, using advanced statistical techniques to provide a timely pulse check on economic momentum. It is the first Australian model to incorporate internal banking data, enhancing its predictive power.

This note provides the second estimate of growth for the March quarter 2026, using domestic and international data released up to and including the March Labour Force Survey (released 16 April 2026). Future updates will be published monthly (see Appendix A for the release schedule).

Monthly activity index declines over March

Our monthly activity index edged lower in March after moving sideways through January and February. Overall, activity was flat across the March quarter, ending a steady upswing that began in May 2025 even before the recent tightening in monetary policy could take effect. The monthly activity index is now sitting around the levels recorded in September 2025.

Importantly, there is greater than usual uncertainty around the monthly activity estimate amid heightened inflationary pressures. Faster price growth can cause nominal indicators, such as consumer spending, to rise strongly even though 'real', inflation adjusted spending may be soft. The inclusion of 'real' indicators, such as employment and banking transaction volumes, helps manage some of this uncertainty but it remains higher than usual given above average inflationary pressures.

Confidence: More noise than signal for now

At this stage, our framework largely looks through the recent sharp falls in consumer and business confidence. Historically, these measures can be volatile, and other indicators have not yet moved in the same direction. In that sense, the decline in confidence is inconsistent with broader domestic economic conditions.

This interpretation is intuitive: the shock triggering the confidence response appears exogenous, or linked to the conflict in the Middle East, rather than arising from domestic economic fundamentals. As such, the declines are currently treated as large idiosyncratic shocks.

That assessment would change if the fall in confidence were sustained or if other high frequency indicators, such as banking transaction data, began to corroborate the signal. In that scenario, the model would revise its treatment and place greater weight on the information coming from confidence measures.

But there are risks with key indicators shifting to neutral

While growth remained resilient in Q1, the longer the Middle East conflict persists, the greater the risk that the weakness evident in confidence starts to show up in a broader set of indicators, such as investment and consumer spending.

Our indicator heatmap decomposes changes in the monthly activity index into group level contributions, allowing us to assess which components drove the recent moderation. For ease of interpretation, indicators are grouped into broad categories. For example, the labour market category includes both official ABS Labour Force Survey outcomes and more timely survey based measures of labour demand and job advertisements.

The heatmap shows that labour market conditions, consumer spending and credit growth lost momentum and shifted to neutral in March, after ending 2025 strongly.

The Common Activity Factor Heatmap by Groups

Westpac Now: Growth moderating even before the recent tightening in monetary policy take effects

Recall that the Westpac-Now estimate is a more refined indicator that combines our monthly activity indicator using advanced econometric techniques to produce point estimates of GDP growth. As previously noted, the fit is not expected to be exact, as measured GDP includes components that are not well captured by other activity measures, such as imputed rents for owner occupiers, public and business inventories, and the depreciation of buildings and equipment. To bridge monthly and quarterly data, we employ a MIDAS framework, which allows us to combine mixed frequency data and incorporate partial information for the current quarter when producing GDP forecasts.

Based on our current forecast equations, the Westpac-Now Q1 2026 second estimate points to GDP growth of 0.6%qtr (range: 0.55–0.75% qtr), lifting year ended growth to 2.8% yr.

Projections further out, based on the indicator's internal dynamics, suggest growth will ease to 0.5%qtr in Q2, before returning to 0.6%qtr in Q3 2026. However, these projections should be treated as tentative, with heightened uncertainty given the reliance on projected inputs rather than realised data. The potential impact of the Middle East conflict implies that these forward projections are even more uncertain than usual.

Evolution of Westpac-Now

Within quarter changes to Westpac-Now, quarterly % change

Source: ABS, Macrobond, Westpac Economics

*Preliminary third estimate, to be updated when the full suite of monthly March data becomes available

Bottom line

Westpac Now points to moderating growth, with GDP tracking at around 0.6%qtr in Q1 2026. While recent sharp declines in confidence are currently being 'looked through', momentum has softened across key indicators, including labour market conditions, consumer spending and credit growth, even before the RBA's rate hikes took effect on the economy. Growth remains resilient for now, but a prolonged Middle East conflict raises the risk that weak confidence and supply chain disruptions reinforce each other, posing a more material downside risk over coming quarters.

Westpac-Now Estimates and Projections*

*Dotted line show Westpac-Now central estimates. Quarter ahead (or Q1 2026) relies on the actual Westpac monthly activity index to March 2026. Beyond the quarter ahead, estimates rely on projections of the Westpac monthly activity index generated using internal model dynamics. Confidence intervals reflect empirical out of sample forecasting errors.

March quarter data signal a moderation in growth

Data released over the March quarter point to growth moderating from the previous quarter. Once data released through the quarter are incorporated, our nowcast estimates Q1 growth at 0.6%qtr. This contrasts with the 0.8%qtr 'pure forecast' estimate that we obtain using only data available up to and including December. The pattern of softer estimates once actual data for the quarter begin to be included in the nowcast also contrasts with Q4 in that the nowcast for that quarter remained higher than the 'pure forecast' estimate as more data were included in successive estimates.

Appendix A: Westpac Now Release Schedule (2026)

Going forward, Westpac Now will be published on the Friday following each ABS Labour Force Survey (LFS) release, at 11:30am AEDT/AEST (Canberra time). Each release incorporates the latest labour market data alongside other high frequency indicators and provides an updated nowcast for quarterly GDP growth. As the quarter progresses, each update should be interpreted as a progressively more complete estimate of that quarter's economic performance.

Release date (Friday)	LFS reference month	Quarter focus	Interpretation
22 May 2026	April 2026	Q1 2026 – final estimate	Near complete read on Q1 activity
19 June 2026	May 2026	Q2 2026 – first estimate	Initial assessment of Q2 momentum
17 July 2026	June 2026	Q2 2026 – second estimate	Refined Q2 signal as activity data accumulate

18 September 2026	August 2026	Q3 2026 – first estimate	Initial assessment of Q3 momentum
16 October 2026	September 2026	Q3 2026 – second estimate	Refined Q3 signal as activity data accumulate
20 November 2026	October 2026	Q3 2026 – final estimate	Near complete read on Q3 activity
18 December 2026	November 2026	Q4 2026 – first estimate	Initial assessment of Q4 momentum

Appendix B: The common activity factor heatmap by indicators

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. The forecasts given above are predictive in character. Whilst every effort has been taken to ensure that the assumptions on which the forecasts are based are reasonable, the forecasts may be affected by incorrect assumptions or by known or unknown risks and uncertainties. The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

The Westpac–Melbourne Institute Consumer Sentiment Index fell heavily in April, declining 12.5% to 80.1 from 91.6 in March.

Read full report 'Westpac-MI Consumer Sentiment April' (PDF 312KB)

- Westpac–Melbourne Institute Consumer Sentiment down 12.5% to 80.1

- Spiking fuel prices, rising interest rates trigger biggest fall since COVID.
- Near-term expectations drop back to 2022–23 ‘cost of living’ crisis lows.
- Job loss fears jump to 5½yr high (10yr high excl. COVID period).
- Consumers much less bullish on house price outlook.

Australian consumers are being hit by another ‘cost of living’ shock. The spike in fuel prices following the US–Israel war on Iran and a further 25bp interest rate increase are again putting finances under intense pressure. A sharp deterioration in expectations suggests consumers are bracing for a return to the extended period of weakness seen during the 2022–24 inflation fight. The April sentiment drop is the biggest monthly decline since the onset of the COVID pandemic. At 80, the Index is back near historical lows, albeit above the extremes seen at the onset of the pandemic and during the recessions of the early 1990s and 1980s” Mr Hassan commented.

All Index components deteriorated sharply in April. Recall that the Westpac–Melbourne Institute Consumer Sentiment Index is a composite measure based on five sub-indexes: one tracking assessments of family finances compared to a year ago; two tracking expectations for family finances and the economy over the next year; one tracking expectations for the economy over the next five years; and one tracking responses to whether now is a good time to buy a major household item.

The biggest falls were across components tracking assessments of ‘current conditions’. Surging fuel costs are weighing particularly heavily on the ‘family finances vs a year ago’ sub-index which plunged 16.7% to 66.8. This is an extremely low read, albeit a touch above the 65 average recorded between September 2022 and June 2024.

Average pump prices hit $2.40/litre in the first week of April, up 37¢ from the time of the March survey and 77¢ compared to early February. This is easily the biggest rise in the history of the survey, with the increase in percentage terms comparable to the 50% annual rise recorded during the 1979 oil crisis. Note that the survey was taken after the Federal government’s temporary halving in fuel excise tax, which came into effect on April 1, the 26¢/litre reduction contributing to a 12¢/litre decline in average pump prices in the first week of the month.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Key insights from the week that was.

Ahead of the worst of the current conflict, the ABS' household spending indicator gained 0.3% in February, in line with January's result and the trend pace of the past two years. Services continued to drive growth overall, aided in particular by holiday-related spending. Goods spending only managed a 0.1% gain, however, remaining weak.

Our Westpac-DataX Card Tracker suggests spending growth is likely to moderate in coming months as higher energy prices and weaker sentiment are felt, though a lasting end to hostilities could ease concern and see households look through some of the cost shock already in train. Geopolitical considerations are challenging for market participants to digest, let alone households and small business. For these individuals, in the fulness of time, pricing responses and time delays up and down the supply chain could prove as, or more, significant than the energy market dynamics currently being witnessed. Risks for the Australian consumer are therefore likely to linger.

In New Zealand, the RBNZ maintained the stance of policy as expected. However, our New Zealand team took the commentary to be hawkish, with a particular focus on second-round inflation pressures. The RBNZ's short-term inflation forecast is now 4.2%yr at June 2026, in line with Westpac NZ Economics' 4.1%yr projection. As a result, Westpac's expected timing for the first hike for the coming cycle has been brought forward from December to September 2026, with the risk of a further acceleration if evidence of second-round inflation impacts accumulates.

Further afield, the data flow was concentrated in the US and mixed in tone. Over the Easter long weekend, nonfarm payrolls rebounded 178k in March, bringing the three-month average back up to 68k compared to an average monthly outcome of -8k in the second half of 2025 and 10k over the full year. The unemployment rate was also consistent with labour supply and demand being in balance in March, edging back down to 4.3%. Note though, this outcome was due to a further decline in the participation rate (now down 0.7ppts since April 2025) rather than an increase in household survey employment.

The weak outcomes for employment through late-2025 look to increasingly be affecting household demand – indeed, the downward revision to Q4 GDP to just 0.5% annualised was in part due to sub-par consumption growth (1.9% annualised).

Since the turn of the year, momentum looks to have slowed further, with real personal consumption expenditure up just 0.1% in February after a flat January. With business investment soft and susceptible to downside risks (core goods order growth in Q1-to-date is less than a third of the pace registered in Q4), US Q1 GDP growth looks likely to maintain a pace well below trend, closer to Q4's third estimate than the 1.3% annualised pace currently projected by the Atlanta Fed's GDPNow nowcast. This is before the sentiment and cost of living shock emanating from the Middle East is felt.

The above outcomes are unlikely to materially alter FOMC member's baseline view and overall risk assessment. While the latest meeting minutes indicate "a vast majority of participants" see "risks to the employment side of the mandate... [as] skewed to the downside", the labour market is considered to be in good health overall. Active risk assessment is therefore likely to focus more on price uncertainty, both with respect to the initial jump in energy prices and second-round effects which, over time, could build greater persistence into the core inflation pulse. This is not to say that the FOMC will vote on hiking interest rates anytime soon, in contrast to the RBA and RBNZ, but it likely means debate over a need to cut further will be deferred for the foreseeable future.

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Financial Markets

Markets were mixed overnight following President Trump's announcement of an indefinite extension to the ceasefire with Iran, despite planned talks between the two countries breaking down. Vice President Vance had been scheduled to travel to Islamabad this week but withdrew as the US awaits submission of a new proposal, with Iran's semi official Tasnim news agency stating there is no prospect of Iran participating in negotiations. Iran later reported it had received "some sign" the US may be willing to end its blockade, with Iran's UN envoy indicating negotiations would resume once the US blockade is lifted. These developments came as a third US aircraft carrier is expected to arrive in the Middle East within the next 3 to 5 days, underscoring ongoing tensions.

- Equities diverged across regions. In the US, strong corporate earnings and optimism around the ceasefire extension revived risk appetite, with the S&P 500 rising 1.0% to a fresh record high of 7,138 and the NASDAQ 100 gaining 1.6%. The Dow Jones posted a more moderate gain of 0.7%, while the VIX fell -3.0% to 18.9.
- European equities were less convinced, with the Euro Stoxx 50 down -0.4% and the FTSE 100 lower by -0.2%. Asian markets were mixed, with Korea's KOSPI up 0.5% and Japan's Nikkei 225 gaining 0.4%, while the Hang Seng fell -1.2%. Locally, the ASX 200 underperformed, declining -1.2%.
- Bond markets sold off modestly, with US yields moving higher across the curve. The 2 year Treasury yield rose 2bps, while the 10 year increased 1bp. Futures pricing for the terminal Fed funds rate edged lower, now implying a 29% probability of an additional rate cut by year end.
- Australian government bonds also retreated amid renewed inflation concerns linked to energy supply risks, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining closed. The yield curve shifted higher, with both 3 year and 10 year yields rising 5bps. Swap markets now fully price two additional rate hikes by year end, implying a terminal cash rate of around 4.65%.
- FX markets saw modest USD strength, with the DXY up 0.2%, while Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent noted that several Persian Gulf and Asian allies have requested FX swap lines with the US. The Australian dollar edged higher against the USD, rising 0.1% to 0.7160, and also appreciated against the Euro (+0.4%), Sterling (+0.2%) and the Yen (+0.2%). Other major currencies underperformed the USD, with the Euro down -0.3% and sterling marginally lower.
- Commodity markets were volatile but finished firmer. Oil initially eased on signs the US may be willing to lift its blockade, before rebounding strongly, with Brent rising

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

3.4% to US$102/bbl and WTI also up 3.4% to US$92.8/bbl. Dated Brent ended the session around US$108/bbl. Gold responded positively to the extension of the ceasefire, gaining 0.4%, with copper following suit, up 1.5%. Iron ore edged 0.4% higher, with gains capped after BHP reached an agreement with China Mineral Resources Group following a month's long standoff.

International Data

The Euro Area consumer confidence index deteriorated from -16.4 in March to -20.6 in April, according to the preliminary reading. Still, that suggest households in Europe remain more confident than most across the developed world, with the index only 6pts below its 5-year average.

UK consumer prices rose 0.7% in March to be 3.3% higher over the year, broadly in line with expectations. Annual core inflation edged lower from 3.2%yr to 3.1%yr, but services inflation strengthened from 4.3%yr to 4.5%yr.

ECB President Lagarde highlighted the immense uncertainty the Euro Area and world are facing. Currently the ECB believe conditions in the Euro Area are between their baseline and adverse projections. The duration of the conflict and evidence of price passthrough are the staff's focus. Lagarde's conclusion was open ended, stating the ECB will "act as the situation demands". ECB member Simkus also noted: "I am of the opinion that we really shouldn't increase interest rates at the next monetary-policy meeting".

Local Data

The Westpac-MI Leading Index fell to -0.13% in March from +0.05% in February, marking its first below-trend reading since August last year, with higher interest rates and the global energy shock weighing on momentum (see here).

Draw a line on just drawing a line

Scenario analysis is essential in uncertain times, but it must be well-grounded, not just drawing an arbitrary line on a graph.

- You know times are uncertain when institutions start publishing scenarios alongside their normal forecasts. Two principles underlie good scenarios. First, the narrative underlying the scenario must hang together – no assuming people do things that are either individually irrational or infeasible.

Second, the scenario must allow people to respond to the initial shock – avoid just drawing a price line on a graph and assuming people cannot adjust their behaviour.

- There is a tension, though, between the need to be realistic and a desire to highlight vulnerabilities or contemplate worst-case scenarios. There is a legitimate role for worst-case thinking, but it must be handled with care. Recall that even though our forecasts last year were less alarmist than many in the wake of Liberation Day, actual outcomes were even better than we had expected.
- The real value of scenarios is teasing out downstream effects and delayed responses. Sometimes the responses to temporary shocks can have lasting effects. From EV purchases to defence budgets, these could be especially important coming out of the current conflict. All the more reason to avoid just drawing a line and assuming that is the outcome.

In times as uncertain as these, you want to be able to articulate more than one possible future state of the world. That is where scenario analysis comes in. Indeed, when institutions start publishing scenarios, you can take it as a sign that things are unusually uncertain. The RBA used scenarios extensively during the pandemic. And while the IMF did not give scenarios any prominence in its previous full World Economic Outlook report in October, it did this week. Similarly, we have published several scenario iterations over the past six weeks and will provide an update later today in our Market Outlook report.

Using scenarios rather than simple uncertainty ranges or a description of risks is especially useful when the possible future states of the world are qualitatively different from the base case, and when the level of conviction about that base case is low. There is nothing wrong with a scenario that is only a little different from the base case, but it is not that interesting or informative.

Two key principles underlie good scenario analysis. First, the premise of the scenario needs to be well-grounded. The narrative motivating the initial impetus must hang together. It must be logically consistent and represent both the interests and the constraints of the actors within the system. In other words, scenarios should not assume that people do things that are either bonkers or infeasible. Individually rational behaviour that is harmful in aggregate, such as panic-buying toilet paper or conducting fire-sales of loss-making assets, should of course be allowed for, but make sure the action is indeed individually rational.

Second, the methods used in developing the scenario need to go beyond first-round thinking. You need to allow for other people to react. A good scenario cannot be just a one-off shock where nothing else changes. Sometimes it takes time for people to adjust to the new situation, so the reaction occurs with a lag. Teasing these reactions out is the value-add of the scenario.

There is a tension, though, between the need to be realistic and a desire to highlight vulnerabilities or contemplate worst-case scenarios. Sometimes a lack of realism is used to guard against a potential failure of imagination. There is a legitimate role for this approach when stress testing, for example. However, unrealistic assumptions in forecast-flavoured scenarios leave your forecasts open to misinterpretation. We have seen an example of this issue this week, where the IMF's worst-case 'severe' scenario, which implies a global recession, has sparked unhelpful talk of recession here in Australia.

Part of the issue is that the IMF's less-bad 'adverse' scenario (which assumes oil prices average USD100/bbl this year before moderating to USD75 next year) and worst-case 'severe' scenario (which assumes oil prices stay around USD125/bbl from the outbreak of the conflict all the way through to end-2027) are both 'top-down' scenarios that appear to start from an assumed path for oil prices. Unlike our own scenario work, they do not explicitly model loss of supply from the Middle East and work out what prices need to do to clear the global market. By effectively just drawing a line on a graph for oil prices, the scenarios assume away any scope for other producers to respond. This is not an issue in the near term, but the longer the assumption is maintained, the less realistic it is. High prices will spur non-OPEC producers such as the US and Canada to boost production. It takes time to get that expansion running, but eventually prices will start to ease.

Because it assumes high prices right through 2027, the 'severe' scenario is most challenged by this issue. This is not to say that the IMF should not have published that scenario, but it is important to understand the context and what it was trying to achieve in doing so.

When developing scenarios, you also need to avoid the trap of thinking only of downside risks. Part of the problem is that downside risks usually come from identifiable events. It is easy to construct a plausible narrative for a scenario starting from "this particular bad thing happened". But as one of my old bosses used to remind us, sometimes you should also consider the risk everything just turns out a little bit better than expected.

As our April Market Outlook goes to publication later today, it is helpful to recall last April's edition. The 'Liberation Day' tariffs had been announced a fortnight previously, and many voices in the market were predicting global or US recessions. At the time we took a more moderate view, based on the principles noted above. Firstly, continuing with very high tariff rates would have been an act of economic self-harm. While it was hard to bet on the Trump administration acting rationally in a context of 'flood the zone' headlines and intemperate social media posts, self-interest is still the best assumption. If there is nothing preventing someone from stopping punching themselves in the face, they will stop punching.

Secondly – and this was a key judgement in our forecast last year – other countries had agency and could respond. In particular, China had scope to stimulate, and this would also cushion growth in Australia. In that context, we note that the latest Chinese GDP growth has again surprised on the upside relative to market expectations.

It turns out that even we were too bearish a year ago: the global economy did much better than expected, and global trade kept expanding with barely a hiccup. Other factors, including a tech boom, turned out to be more important than expected. Trade patterns were also re-routed around the highest tariffs, and of course the US government de-escalated, as is proving to be its pattern.

These principles also hold for other kinds of scenarios. Whenever you read a prediction of doom concerning, say, adoption of a new technology, ask yourself what is preventing people from responding to ameliorate the bad thing. What prevents macroeconomic policymakers from easing, for example, or the tax system from redistributing unequal gains? While occasionally decision-makers decide that a bad thing is good actually, holding that position is itself fragile.

Where scenarios can really add value is when they highlight a lasting effect from a temporary shock. Whether it is the person who buys an EV in response to current high petrol prices and reduces their petrol consumption permanently, or the government that reassesses its defence spending, behavioural responses can change longer-term demand trends, and so the prices that prevail further out. Normalisation after a shock does not always take you back to where you were. That is another reason why it is so important to avoid just drawing a line on a graph and calling it a scenario, ignoring system-wide effects.

First Impressions: NZIER Quarterly Survey of Business Opinion, March quarter 2026

Business confidence fell sharply after the Iran conflict, with the gloom deepening over the course of March.

Key results (seasonally adjusted)

General business situation: +1 (Prev: +39)

Trading activity, past three months: 0 (Prev: -3)

Trading activity, next three months: +13 (Prev: +22)

Average selling prices, past three months: +22 (Prev: +13)

Average selling prices, next three months: +43 (Prev: +25)

Business confidence has unsurprisingly taken a knock since the Iran war kicked off at the end of February. Indeed, given the fast-moving situation, the headline results of the Quarterly Survey of Business Opinion understate the degree of the shock. Firms noted ongoing cost pressures, and a growing number of them are intending to raise their prices, but their ability to do so remains mixed. Overall, today's survey probably underscores rather than deepens the dilemma that the RBNZ will be facing in the coming months.

Sentiment about the general business situation fell from +39 to +1, the lowest reading since September 2024 – and that doesn't come close to telling the full story. Surveying began on 6 March, and the initial batch of responses was a net 34% positive. After the first reminder in mid-March, the next batch was a net 7% negative, and the last batch at the end of March was a whopping net 57% negative. NZIER didn't provide this breakdown for the other survey questions, but we can reasonably assume that there was a similar deterioration over the course of the month.

The own-activity measure for the last quarter actually picked up a little compared to the December survey, emphasising that the economy was regaining some momentum before the Iran war. Expectations for the next quarter fell from +22 to +13, though again the picture is likely to have looked significantly worse by the end of the survey period.

A net 37% of firms reported a rise in their costs, unchanged from last quarter. Expected costs for the next quarter were a net 45%, up from 39% in December – not a big increase, but this measure was already at elevated levels.

A net 22% of firms increased their prices last quarter, compared to 13% in December. More notably, a net 43% plan to raise their prices in the next quarter, the highest reading since September 2023. Firms' ability to raise their prices remained mixed across sectors though: for instance, builders reported a sharp rise in costs but a net 25% lowered their own prices last quarter.

Employment was down a net 5% past quarter, after a brief pickup in December, and hiring intentions also turned negative again. That said, there is evidence of labour shortages emerging again for skilled roles, though not for unskilled ones.

China is set to benefit from global energy unrest

Chinese exports will receive a material boost from high oil prices. The consumer remains a risk to GDP growth, however.

China's economy has begun 2026 in good health despite the conflict in the Middle East, registering annual GDP growth of 5.0% in Q1. In time, recent developments are likely to prove a net positive for China, spurring greater demand for green technology across developed and developing markets.

Not only were the March readings for the official NBS manufacturing and services PMI's favourable, registering increases to 50.4 and 50.1, but the partial data through February and March showed the beginning of a long-awaited stabilisation in consumer demand and turn for housing investment, retail sales growth beating estimates in February at 2.8%ytd (although growth slowed again in March to 2.4%ytd) and the decline in property investment almost halving from -17.2%ytd in December to -11.2%ytd in March. The latter result is particularly welcome given construction activity has declined almost 40% since end-2021.

In the short term, an end to the sharp decline in property investment will add meaningfully to economic growth given the sector still makes up circa 15% of the aggregate economy. In the medium to long-term though, not only will investment activity need to expand sustainably, but wealth must follow. As yet, there is no evidence of price growth, with new and existing home prices falling a further 0.2% in March.

We remain circumspect on the rate at which retail sales growth will accelerate from here near term, anticipating it is unlikely to return to trend, let alone outperform, until pro-active fiscal policy comes into effect. Authorities signalled an intention to act at the March NPC, but detail has been scarce since.

It is potentially the case that the Government wants clean air for reforms, which the Middle East conflict and the upcoming May meeting between President Xi and President Trump precludes for now. Though authorities may also feel the domestic economy has been given additional time to find its own path without intervention. The response of consumers and businesses across developed and developing markets to the current surge in energy prices will almost surely be an acceleration in demand for renewable energy products and electric vehicles, which China is globally dominant in and has ample spare capacity to produce and ship.

Even without a further material improvement in domestic demand, the short-term downside risks for Chinese GDP growth are receding thanks to this catalyst. Note too, the positive impulse is likely to prove lasting as geopolitical uncertainty over energy supply produces a national imperative to reduce reliance on the Middle East, particularly amongst south-east Asia, Latin America and Africa, where Chinese firms are experiencing particularly rapid demand growth.

Indeed, the learnings from this crisis, and what is expected to be a favourable result from the May meeting between President Xi and President Trump, could also skew long-term risks for Chinese growth and sentiment to the upside. This is not to say that 5.0% growth is probable for 2026–2028, but rather that growth is increasingly likely to stabilise around 4.5% instead of 4.0%.

Attaining annual growth of 5.0% over successive years would require material gains for trade, industrial investment, property construction and household consumption. The latter would necessitate a dramatic turn in actual and expected wealth and sentiment, however. While not impossible, given the poor starting point on both fronts, this is best considered a low probability and long-coming upside risk.

Sooner than later though, the favourable shift in global opportunities and risks for China is likely to support stronger demand in Chinese financial instruments. Yields and credit spreads will remain compressed, enticing additional real economy investment, and equities should see sustained inflows of new capital.

Paired with continued strength in the trade balance and the returns from offshore investments currently being made by Chinese firms, demand for the renminbi will grow in depth and breadth. Given the diversity of Chinese interests across the globe, currency gains are expected on a trade-weighted basis but will be most acute bilaterally versus the US dollar – the only currency Chinese entities look to be reducing their exposure to. Importantly, trade-weighted currency gains are likely to be proportional to China’s competitiveness opportunities, and so should not materially narrow the current account.

This analysis was initially released in the April edition of Westpac Market Outlook.

A short video update from the Westpac Economics team.

The March Labour Force Survey painted a decent picture for the starting point of the labour market before the Middle East shock and recent interest rate rises started to impact. However, the labour market outlook has become much gloomier as the Middle East conflict has unfolded.

China offers global growth a well-timed boost

5.0%yr growth in Q1 2026 is a significant achievement, and the Middle East conflict is likely to accelerate demand for Chinese goods from here. Still, the growth base needs to broaden.

China's economy has offered the world a well-timed boost, annual growth accelerating from 4.5%yr in Q4 2025 to 5.0%yr in Q1 2026. Authorities noted this was despite an unfavourable base effect, annual growth having previously peaked at 5.4% in Q4 2024 and Q1 2025. Quarterly growth was also a touch stronger in Q1 2026 than Q4 2025, at 1.3% versus 1.2%.

From the monthly partial data, China's Q1 momentum was principally due to the strength of exporters and the investment being undertaken across the economy. The trade surplus averaged $88bn through Q1, broadly in line with the average of 2024 and 2025. Moreover, the narrowing of the surplus in March came as a result of a surge in imports which is likely to, at least, partly reverse in coming months as exports continue to grow. The Middle East conflict is likely to sustainably increase demand for green technology from China, opening up an opportunity for the trade surplus to reach new historic highs.

Regarding investment, transport and storage-related infrastructure spending reportedly surged in early-2026, while manufacturing investment showed signs of entering a (modest) upswing and utilities investment continued to compound around 9%ytd. Within the manufacturing sector, stronger demand for green technology goods and refined energy products is likely to elicit an upturn in capital expenditure through 2026, with the key investment sub-categories of electrical machinery, automobiles (EVs) and chemicals all showing evidence of stabilisation in Q1. There is reason for guarded optimism over the outlook for property investment too, the year-to-date decline having moderated from -17%ytd at December to -11%ytd in February and March. Still equivalent to circa 15% of GDP, an end to the sharp construction declines of recent years could provide a material boost to aggregate growth through 2026.

The support offered to GDP by external demand and investment masks the still-troubled state of consumer demand, however. Having surprised to the upside in February at 2.8%ytd, in March retail sales growth slowed once again to 2.4%ytd. While not a disastrous outcome by any means, it is less than half the average pace of the past five years post pandemic, a historically-weak period for household demand growth. Policy makers have been clear in their intent to provide additional support to households, but are yet to action plans. And, while equities have risen through the year, house prices continue to decline, weighing on wealth and sentiment.

All told, China is likely to benefit from the Middle East conflict by scaling up production and exports of green technology and refined energy products/chemicals to meet global demand. This will likely help GDP growth edge closer to 5.0% in 2026 and hold at or above 4.5% in 2027. Still, to sure up future growth prospects, authorities must action their intended support for households and incentivise additional domestically-focused investment by private and public entities. Without this broadening of the growth pulse, aggregate momentum will remain susceptible to slipping towards, or through, 4.0% in coming years. Following President Trump's May visit and (hopefully) a lasting end to the Middle East conflict, we expect stimulus to be delivered.

WESTPAC WAVE

FIJI ECONOMIC UPDATE AND OUTLOOK

April 2026

Fiji will get through this crisis

Shamal Chand

Senior Economist, Westpac Pacific Economics

The Strait of Hormuz remains closed as the Middle East conflict enters its 53rd day. At the time of this publication, prospects for a second round of US–Iran negotiations appear to be fading in Pakistan, as Iran declines to attend. On 22 April, Trump said the US would extend the ceasefire indefinitely until a new proposal is submitted and talks conclude, while maintaining the blockade over the Strait.

Fiji finds itself in a difficult position through no action of its own. The energy market crisis triggered by the conflict is widely regarded as the largest since the 1970s oil shock, with its effects already reverberating through the Fijian economy.

Domestic fuel prices rose sharply in April, following panic buying and hoarding ahead of the official price announcement. Further fuel price increases are likely in coming months as the Fiji Competition and Consumer Commission (FCCC) reassesses global refined fuel prices, shipping/insurance costs and exchange-rate movements. Given fuel remains price-controlled, the pass-through to consumers has so far been partially muted, though pressures are clearly building.

If the conflict is prolonged, Fiji could face significant challenges to economic activity and foreign-reserve holdings, stemming from both higher import costs and potential disruptions to tourism export earnings. Airline route consolidation, driven by rising operating and jet fuel costs, poses a particular risk. Despite tourism performing strongly in the first three months of 2026, with visitor arrivals rising 7.0%/y, we expect a flatter tourism profile for the remainder of the year in our baseline scenario, given its high exposure to the fuel-dependent transport sector. Elevated jet fuel prices and the risk of supply disruptions present downside risks, especially from the perspective of high intermediate costs. Fiji Airways has already begun consolidating operations, explicitly citing high jet fuel prices as a key driver.

Accordingly, we have downgraded Fiji's 2026 growth forecast to 2.0%, from a pre-conflict projection of 3.3%. Even if the conflict ends soon, our baseline scenario suggests a stalling recovery, with full normalisation unlikely before mid-2027. Headline inflation could rise to around 6.4% by Sept-2026.

While no physical disruptions to Fiji's fuel imports have been observed so far, cost pressures are already being felt, particularly by Energy Fiji Limited (EFL), which still relies on thermal generation for around half of national electricity demand. EFL is now urging consumers to conserve electricity amid rising fuel costs. Electricity rationing is on card now for if diesel supply is disrupted.

Fiji received a major fuel shipment on 4 April, according to IMF ports data, with another major tanker arriving on 21 April, followed by a further shipment expected in early May, based on live shipping-tracking data. On 19 April, Singapore's Foreign Minister assured Fiji that fuel shipments would not be affected.

Beyond energy, the industrial sector, including mining, faces rising input costs that will dampen real output. Manufacturers are expected to pass higher costs on to consumers over time, while agriculture is expected to see declining value addition due to higher fuel and fertiliser costs. These developments are reflected in our downgraded growth outlook. We continue to monitor and assess the ongoing conflict and will update our forecast accordingly.

The Fiji Government has repeatedly confirmed that fuel stocks remain adequate. More recently, the Government activated the four-phase Fiji National Fuel Emergency Action Plan to manage fuel and cost-of-living risks linked to the conflict. In a nationwide address, Prime Minister Rabuka announced parallel fiscal and household measures under consideration, including a proposed 20% salary cut for Ministers and MPs subject to approval, an immediate halt to overseas travel, a freeze on new civil service hiring, diesel subsidies for EFL, relief measures for bus operators, and potential temporary reductions in FNPF contribution rates to support take-home pay. With the national budget due in June, further support measures may be announced, dependent on fiscal space.

Crisis is an opportunity

History shows crises often force economies to reassess systems, behaviour and policy choices. While short-term shocks are painful, the medium- to long-term outcome often includes greater efficiency, stronger institutions and enhanced resilience. For Fiji, the conflict underscores long-recognised vulnerabilities, most notably dependence on imported fossil fuels. The COVID-19 experience offers a useful parallel: while deeply disruptive, it accelerated digital payments and improved financial inclusion.

Energy security is therefore likely to move higher on the policy agenda with this conflict. Renewable investment may accelerate, electric vehicles and plug-in hybrids could gain traction, and businesses may diversify suppliers, hold larger inventories and invest in more fuel-efficient capital. Even if this conflict proves shorter than feared, another shock will eventually emerge. For Fiji, this episode is both a warning about fuel dependence and an opportunity to build lasting energy resilience before the next crisis strikes.

Finally, expectations of a structurally weaker US dollar could provide some relief under Fiji's fixed exchange-rate regime. A firmer FJD against the USD could help contain imported inflation, particularly fuel. The FJD is expected to remain broadly stable versus the AUD, supporting tourism competitiveness, while weakening modestly against the NZD, EUR and JPY and slightly reducing export competitiveness to the US.

The fragile ceasefire extended indefinitely...

It is now 53 days since the Middle East conflict began, leading to the complete closure of the Strait of Hormuz and causing significant disruption to energy markets. The global economy has been extremely volatile since then.

The Strait of Hormuz sits at the centre of these concerns. Before the conflict intensified, more than 100 vessels transited the Strait each day. Recent data suggest that traffic has dropped to only a handful of ships. Given that close to one-fifth of the world's oil and LNG supply passes through this single chokepoint, the impact on global markets has been severe. The Strait remained closed at the time of publication.

On 22 April, President Trump said the United States had indefinitely extended the ceasefire, maintaining its naval blockade of Iranian port traffic until Iran agrees to US terms and submits a new proposal. The ceasefire, initially agreed for two weeks from 7–8 April, has come under increasing strain as military blockades persist. While large-scale air and missile strikes have paused, both sides continue to accuse each other of violating the spirit of the ceasefire.

Despite US reassurances and the formal ceasefire, insurance coverage for transit through the Strait of Hormuz remains difficult to obtain, and major shipping companies remain reluctant to resume normal passage. A 10-day Israel–Lebanon ceasefire began on 16 April, easing fighting in southern Lebanon, but this has not resolved broader US–Iran conflict dynamics or maritime tensions. The US naval blockade of Iranian ports remains in place.

After Iran briefly stated that the Strait of Hormuz was fully open to commercial vessels, restrictions were re-imposed over the weekend of 18–19 April, with Tehran citing continued US violations of the ceasefire through its blockade of Iranian ports. Iran has stated that access through the Strait will remain constrained until the blockade is lifted. The US maintains that it is blockading Iranian port traffic rather than the Strait itself, but overlapping instructions and operational uncertainty have sharply reduced transit volumes.

US–Iran talks remain ongoing but inconclusive, with Pakistan acting as the main intermediary after earlier negotiations in Islamabad failed to secure a longer-term ceasefire. Reportedly, progress has stalled over three key issues: Iran's uranium enrichment and stockpiles, the US naval blockade, and rules governing Hormuz shipping access and coordination.

Oil prices remain extremely volatile, falling sharply following ceasefire announcements and rebounding after renewed Hormuz closures. Physical markets remain tight due to tanker congestion, re-routing, and insurance constraints. Since the onset of the conflict, tanker freight costs have surged, with Baltic Exchange dirty and clean tanker indices rising sharply. On average, global refined product prices have increased sharply, with Singapore gasoline up 169%, gasoil up 244%, and jet fuel also up 244% from pre-conflict levels.

... keeping Fiji's economy at risk

Fiji's economy faces significant downside risks from the ongoing Middle East conflict, leading to higher fuel prices, transport and shipping costs plus a higher import bill. Any potential disruptions to fuel supply could meaningfully hamper domestic economic activity, which is already facing significant strain from higher prices. The tourism sector faces elevated risks from higher jet fuel prices and, in a more severe scenario, the unavailability of jet fuel that could ground long-haul flights. High fuel prices, and their second-round effects transmitted through other channels, are expected to add materially to intermediate costs across all economic sectors.

Westpac's baseline assumption is that the Strait of Hormuz will be effectively closed for around 8 weeks, through to late April, followed by a slow and incomplete reopening. Full normalisation is not expected until late-2026 to mid-2027. The two-week ceasefire announced on 7 April reduced the risk of escalation, but did not materially alter near-term oil or shipping flows. Tanker traffic remains severely constrained, and Iranian exports (around 1.6 mb/d) remain largely offline. Even under a relatively optimistic ceasefire scenario, initial reopening would lift shipping capacity to only around 20–30% of pre-conflict levels, with both production and shipping recovering only gradually.

Brent oil is expected to average around US$105 per barrel in Q2 2026, easing to approximately US$75 per barrel by end-2026. However, physical oil and refined product prices are expected to remain elevated for longer due to logistics, insurance, and refinery constraints. Even if the conflict were to end in April under an optimistic scenario, the recovery is expected to be slow.

After factoring in these risks, we have downgraded Fiji's growth forecast for 2026 to 2.0%, from our pre-conflict outlook of 3.3%. Growth is expected to rebound to 3.2% in 2027. Higher input costs are expected to erode value-addition across key sectors, resulting in a broadly flatter growth profile for industries heavily reliant on fuel and transport inputs. We expect visitor arrivals to be flat this year, despite a very strong Q1 outcome, reflecting downside risks from higher fuel prices and the likelihood of jet fuel supply disruptions affecting flights. The primary sector, especially agriculture is at risk from higher fuel and fertiliser prices. Government spending is expected to provide some support in 2026. We expect cost-of-living support measures to be announced in the upcoming June Budget ahead of the General Election later this year.

Further, these domestic risks are compounded by the threat of a broader slowdown, or recession, across Fiji's major trading and tourism markets, particularly Australia, New Zealand, and the US. Higher inflation and weaker growth in these economies could constrain their household budgets, reducing outbound travel and dampening tourist arrivals to Fiji.

Westpac Economics, in its latest April Market Outlook, expects the Middle East conflict to remain a major global shock in 2026 with Australia expected to experience a slight slowdown, with GDP growth averaging around 1.8% in 2026, trimmed-mean inflation peaking near 4%, and unemployment rising towards 5%. The Reserve Bank of Australia is expected to deliver three further 25bp rate hikes (in May, June, and August) to contain second-round inflation pressures.

New Zealand is also entering a period of slower growth of 1.5% and elevated inflation, with higher oil prices acting as a negative terms-of-trade shock. In the US, growth had already slowed prior to the conflict. The Federal Reserve is expected to remain on hold, tolerating energy-driven headline inflation while closely monitoring labour-market risks.

Asia remains highly exposed given its reliance on energy and food imports. Inflation pressures are expected to keep policy settings tighter for longer, though outcomes remain uneven. China is relatively insulated, with Q1 2026 growth at 5.0%y/y and longer-term support from rising global demand for green technologies.

Overall, there is an upside risk to our growth outlook if the tourism sector sees minimal impact from the conflict, beating our underlying assumption. However, this would depend on flights continuing to operate as normal and the national airline being able to absorb higher operating costs through efficiency gains, without any disruptions.

Fuel prices will rise further

Fuel prices rose sharply nationwide from 1 April, with motor spirit increasing to $2.93 per litre (from $2.44), diesel to $2.89 per litre (from $2.14), and kerosene to $2.40 per litre (from $1.69). These increases were broadly in line with our expectations. As expected, gas prices saw no major change due to their contractual pricing arrangements. However, rising shipping costs could place upward pressure on LPG prices in the near-term.

So far, the full impact of global energy price increases has not yet been fully felt domestically in Fiji, largely due to fuel price controls.

Fuel prices are expected to rise further in May, with additional adjustments likely to be announced by the FCCC in the coming days, adding to the price increases experienced in April. Our fuel price forecasts are presented in the table below.

Fuel prices are expected to exceed levels experienced during the Russia–Ukraine war in upcoming months, reflecting much wider refinery margins, damage to oil and gas infrastructure in the Middle East, and the prolonged closure of a major global chokepoint.

Even before the March price adjustments took effect, there were early signs of panic buying and fuel hoarding locally, placing additional pressure on logistics and supply chains.

Higher fuel prices are expected to feed through into input costs across all sectors. Given Fiji's heavy reliance on imports and shipping for food supply, higher fuel and insurance costs have raised shipping costs, placing upward pressure on the prices of food and other essentials.

Headline inflation is expected to peak at around 6.4% by September 2026, averaging 3.4% for the year, with upside risks should the conflict extend beyond April under our baseline scenario and the Strait of Hormuz remain closed.

The Fiji Government imposes a 46c per litre fiscal duty on motor spirit and around 20c per litre on diesel, together with 12.5% VAT. FCCC accommodates a retail margin of 10c per litre on motor spirit and 9.5c on diesel. The Fiji Government's fiscal space to respond to incoming inflationary pressures is extremely limited. While reducing fiscal duties could be considered, this would not be best practice.

As with the VAT cut in the last budget, fuel duty reductions are unlikely to be fully passed through to consumers. Targeted income support for vulnerable households would be a more effective option.

Fiji's fuel supply remains unaffected

Global oil market

The Energy Information Administration \(EIA\), in its April report, estimates that around 7.5 mb/d of crude oil production was shut in during March, rising to about 9.1 mb/d in April, largely across Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the UAE, Qatar and Bahrain. These shut-ins have forced consuming regions to draw down inventories rapidly.

Global observed oil inventories fell by 85 mb in March. Outside the Middle East Gulf, stocks declined by 205 mb, while oil on water fell sharply by 107 mb. Meanwhile, inventories have been building in the Middle East, with around 100 mb added to floating storage and about 20 mb added to onshore crude stocks. China added 40 mb of crude in March, acting as a partial buffer for the global system, with some of these barrels supplying Singapore refineries. The EIA has downgraded its near-term global oil demand outlook. Even after the conflict ends, demand destruction from sustained high prices and the continued structural shift away from oil are expected to remain a constraint on the global oil market over the long-term.

Robert Rennie, Westpac's Head of Commodities and Carbon Strategy, notes in a recent Energy Market Report that the market is materially under-pricing the physical impact of the US–Iran conflict. He estimates that around 12 mb/d of crude and refined product exports have been disrupted, implying roughly over 550 million barrels removed from global supply.

Fiji's fuel supply

At present, fuel shipments are en route to Fiji, with the Shan Gang Fa Xian vessel (45,841 DWT) arriving on 2 May. The Morning Glory tanker vessel (50,322 DWT) arrived on 21 April. Importantly, deliveries scheduled for both April and May remain secured, and no disruptions to fuel shipments to Fiji have been observed to date.

On 19 April, Singapore's Foreign Minister also assured Fiji that Singapore will not impose restrictions on fuel exports and will continue to ensure the free flow of energy supplies through diversification, resilience and open international trade routes.

In March, Fiji imported approximately 85,861 tonnes of fuel, of which about 11,585 tonnes were re-exported to other Pacific Island countries. This left roughly 74,276 tonnes available for domestic use, adding an estimated 26 days of fuel cover to national reserves. According to IMF port data, Fiji imported 56,085 tonnes of fuel as of 17 April, while re-exported 19,410 tonnes of fuel, resulting in a net import of 36,675 tonnes. Comparatively, Fiji imported over 100,000 metric tonnes of fuel in April last year. In 2025, Fiji imported about 1.3 million tonnes of fuel, with around 170,000 tonnes re-exported to neighbouring Pacific economies.

The domestic fuel market is supplied by Mobil, Pacific Energy and TotalEnergies Fiji, with bulk storage terminals located at Walu Bay in Suva and Vuda Point in Lautoka. Dedicated LPG facilities are located in Lami and Malau. Nationwide fuel storage capacity exceeds 100 million litres, while average daily fuel consumption is close to 2.5 million litres, placing Fiji's standalone fuel cover at roughly 40 days under normal operating conditions. When scheduled deliveries are incorporated, effective fuel cover typically extends to two to three months.

Fiji imports 100% of its refined fuels, including petrol, diesel, Jet A-1 and kerosene, predominantly from Singapore, while LPG is sourced from Australia under longer-term supply arrangements.

Why is the diesel price so high?

Historically, the price of diesel has been below that of unleaded petrol. However, this trend is now changing. The key reason lies in tightness within refined fuel markets, particularly for diesel and jet fuel. The EIA highlights that refining systems are globally less flexible than crude supply, and refinery operations have been disrupted by both crude availability constraints and direct infrastructure risks.

Diesel is also a globally traded fuel, critical for shipping, trucking and industrial activity worldwide. Diesel powers freight transport, heavy machinery, power generators and military vehicles. Even in war-driven price spikes, trucks must continue hauling goods, ships must keep sailing, and backup generators must remain operational. Refineries cannot instantly shift production to increase diesel output. Diesel is derived from specific crude fractions, which are particularly exposed during geopolitical disruptions. This is why diesel prices have gone up quickly.

Elevated diesel prices have significant implications for electricity generation in Fiji, where Energy Fiji Limited (EFL) continues to rely on thermal generation to meet around half of total electricity demand.

Tourism is still the X-factor

We expect visitor arrivals to remain broadly flat in 2026, despite a strong start to the year. Visitor arrivals in Q1 2026 increased by 7.0%/y, supported by robust outcomes across all three months. Arrivals totalled 70,993 in January, dipped seasonally to 54,219 in February, before rebounding sharply to a record 71,765 in March. This lifted total Q1 arrivals to 196,977 visitors, compared to 184,119 in 2025.

Monthly growth strengthened through the quarter, rising from 0.3%/y in January to 9.6% in February and 12.4% in March. March recorded the highest visitor arrivals ever for the month, suggesting demand regained momentum following the seasonal slowdown in February.

While tourism sector momentum was strong in early 2026, the outlook for the remainder of the year is becoming more challenging. Elevated jet fuel prices, coupled with risks of fuel supply disruptions linked to the ongoing Middle East conflict, present significant headwinds for airline operations and the wider tourism sector.

These pressures have already begun to affect flight capacity. Fiji Airways has announced the temporary suspension of four services across two international routes, including selected services on the Nadi–Brisbane route from late April and Tuesday services on the Dallas–Nadi route between May and mid-June. With fuel remaining its single largest cost, the airline is preparing for a prolonged period of elevated operating expenses. Management has signalled a cautious approach, focusing on efficiency gains, route optimisation, and prioritising core Australia and New Zealand markets, while seeking to limit fare increases where possible. The national airline is expected to face higher operating costs, which will weigh on its margins. The national airline may pursue further route consolidation if access to jet fuel at offshore airports becomes constrained, as countries increasingly prioritise domestic supply.

Australia remained Fiji's largest source market in Q1 2026, with arrivals totalling 86,445 visitors, up 8.5%/y, although its share of arrivals softened in February before recovering in March. New Zealand arrivals rose 5.1%/y to 33,506 visitors, providing steady support across the quarter. Arrivals from the US continued to perform strongly, increasing 5.2%/y to 26,189 visitors, with the US share of arrivals rising steadily through the quarter. Visitor arrivals from China spiked in February before easing in March, pointing to early signs of a gradual recovery from Asian markets, albeit still below pre-pandemic levels. Overall, Fiji's major source markets continued to account for around 82–90% of total arrivals.

Working-age travellers remained the dominant visitor cohort, with 65.2% aged 25–64, while holiday travel continued to account for around 75–80% of arrivals each month. Under our baseline scenario, these factors point to flat visitor arrivals for 2026, with upside risk should fuel prices ease and operational disruptions prove limited.

Fiji dollar risks contained

Westpac Economics, in the latest April Market Outlook, expects the US dollar to weaken structurally over the medium term as its safe-haven appeal fades, despite ongoing Middle East risks. USD gains have remained capped during the conflict, with markets increasingly willing to look through geopolitical shocks amid expectations of a gradual reopening of the Strait of Hormuz and improving global growth prospects outside the US. The DXY index is expected to fall from around 98 to 96.8 by end-2026 and to 94.0 by end-2027.

The Australian dollar is expected to outperform, supported by Australia's relatively tighter policy stance. The RBA is set to deliver three additional rate hikes, lifting AUD back to multi-year highs. AUD strength is described as being rate-driven, assisted by a positive terms of trade shock, rather than purely risk-on sentiment, with AUD/USD forecast to trade around 0.73–0.74 through 2027.

The New Zealand dollar is also projected to recover gradually as the USD weakens, though energy-related income shocks and slightly later RBNZ tightening cash rate. NZD/USD is forecast to rise toward 0.62 by end-2026 and 0.67 by end-2027.

The Euro is identified as a key beneficiary of USD depreciation as the ECB shifts from expected cuts to rate hikes in response to higher energy-driven inflation. Westpac projects EUR/USD to rise toward 1.20–1.22 by 2027.

The Japanese yen, starting from very weak levels, is forecast to strengthen materially as Japanese policy normalises and global risk conditions stabilise, with USD/JPY falling toward the low-140s by 2028.

As such, under Fiji's basket-peg exchange rate regime, the RBF target stability in the trade-weighted FJD. The projected path implies the FJD strengthens against the USD, remains broadly stable versus the AUD, and weakens modestly against the EUR, JPY and NZD over time.

This aligns with our expectation that the US dollar increasingly lacks support, even amid Middle East tensions. A firmer Fiji dollar against the US dollar could help contain imported inflation pressures, particularly for USD-invoiced imports such as fuel and freight-intensive goods. This means Fiji exports to the United States, especially mineral water could become slightly more expensive for US consumers.

From a tourism competitiveness perspective, the largely stable FJD/AUD relationship implies Fiji's price competitiveness for Australian visitors remains broadly unchanged. However, a weaker FJD against the NZD suggests Fiji becomes marginally more affordable for New Zealand visitors.

FJD weakness against the Japanese yen raises the local currency cost of Japan-sourced goods and services, like Japanese vehicles.

Energy investment is critical for Fiji's future

There was considerable discussion around the Fijian Competition and Consumer Commission's (FCCC) proposed electricity tariff changes in late December 2025. The announcement attracted country-wide criticism from households and businesses concerned about the potential economic impact, prompting a 21-day public consultation period in January.

Now that the initial reaction has eased, it is timely to revisit this issue. This discussion has become even more relevant in the context of the ongoing Middle East conflict, which has once again exposed Fiji's vulnerability to global energy price shocks and supply disruptions. The Minister for Finance, Esrom Immanuel had indicated that the final increase in electricity tariffs is expected to be lower than the initially proposed 24.2%, following public consultation feedback. Even so, tariff rates are still expected to rise.

Revisiting the proposed changes, under the FCCC's 2025 tariff determination Fiji was set to transition from a single flat tariff to an inclining block (tiered) structure for domestic customers, although this has since been put on hold.

More than half of residential customers were to fall within the 0–100 unit band and would therefore see no change in their electricity bills. For commercial customers, the FCCC approved a move from a flat tariff to a stepped inclining block structure, with rates ranging from around 43c to 63c per unit and an average increase of 24.2%. As with households, higher consumption attracts higher marginal tariffs. Notably, electricity tariffs were last revised in October 2019.

This note outlines why an eventual increase in electricity tariffs remains justified and important for Fiji's future, despite short-term inflationary pressures, especially in a world where geopolitical risks are once again driving fuel price volatility.

The global AI revolution is driving large-scale investment into energy supply, grid systems and supporting infrastructure to meet electricity-intensive digital demand. In larger economies, deep capital markets and competitive pricing frameworks support this transition.

Fiji, however, faces different realities. Electricity supply in Fiji is a natural monopoly. Generation and grid systems require large, long-lived upfront investments that cannot be efficiently duplicated in a small market. When tariffs are held below the cost of reliable supply, investment is delayed, outage risks rise, and the system becomes increasingly reliant on ad-hoc public support, an approach that becomes more problematic when fiscal pressures are rising due to higher global fuel and import costs linked to conflicts such as those in the Middle East.

For Fiji to position itself as a regional trade and digital connectivity hub, sustained investment in energy infrastructure is essential. Electricity demand has already risen to the point where additional diesel generators are required during peak periods, exposing Fiji directly to global fuel price movements. At the same time, Google has begun constructing a major ICT facility in Natadola, including a new subsea cable landing station. This strengthens Fiji's role in regional digital connectivity but also raises the importance of a reliable, expandable and modernised power system. Fiji still relies heavily on fossil-fuel generation, and meeting rising demand sustainably will require an accelerated shift toward renewable energy.

Stronger grid investment and renewable energy development are also critical for Fiji's core economic sectors. Tourism, which accounts for nearly 70% of services activity, depends on stable electricity for hotels, airports and transport systems. Agriculture (13.5% of GDP) relies on electricity for irrigation, cooling, milling and packaging, while manufacturing (17.4% of GDP) depends on reliable power to remain competitive. In an environment of global energy uncertainty, a weak grid would amplify economic shocks rather than absorb them.

Energy Fiji Limited (EFL) has outlined more than FJ$1.7 billion in planned investment over the next decade, aligned with Fiji's target of achieving 100% renewable electricity by 2035. EFL has reported electricity demand growth of around 9% in 2024 and expects annual demand growth of about 5%. At current tariff levels, EFL has indicated it would be unable to adequately fund new generation capacity, transmission upgrades and system-wide resilience, increasing the risk of future power disruptions.

Financing these investments cannot rely on syndicated banking alone. Small Island Developing States face high capital costs, limited economies of scale and long payback periods, making energy projects less attractive to private financiers, particularly when tariffs are tightly constrained. EFL has stated that tariff revenue is the only stable and predictable cash flow available to service debt and unlock long-term financing.

While higher electricity tariffs will have a measurable short-term impact on inflation, the effect is likely to be smaller than feared and should ease over time. The longer-term benefits including reduced diesel imports, lower exposure to global energy price shocks, and stronger energy security are especially valuable during periods of geopolitical instability. Higher tariffs may also encourage greater uptake of rooftop solar, strengthening energy independence further.

The experience of the Water Authority of Fiji offers a cautionary lesson. Persistently low tariffs, chronic under-investment and reliance on public support have led to frequent service disruptions. Fiji cannot afford to repeat this mistake in the energy sector.

The US dollar increasingly lacks support

Key themes for the US dollar and global FX markets.

Last month we highlighted that US dollar gains in the lead-up to March Market Outlook had been narrow and capped around 100 for the DXY index. Since then, despite a material escalation in the Middle East conflict, the ceasefire being threatened by a complete breakdown of the first round of in-person negotiations between the US and Iran, and the US subsequently blockading Iranian ports, the US dollar has continued to struggle for upward momentum. On rumours of a resumption of negotiations, the past few days have seen it edge lower against numerous currencies across developed and developing markets.

In our view, there is a degree of hope in current market pricing. That said, typically the market impact of a crisis such as this begins to unwind long before a formal peace agreement is disclosed. And, in this particular instance, the short-term workarounds for supply and the intent shown by world leaders excluding the US to restore shipping capacity are also helping alleviate anxiety.

While certainly not a panacea for the conflict's ill effects, if we are right in expecting a slow-but-steady resumption of shipping through the Strait of Hormuz in coming weeks, which continues to year end, then the US dollar is likely to weaken further, to the benefit of currencies most affected by the crisis – Euro and Sterling being developed world examples – and of nations set to benefit from improving global growth opportunities – China being the obvious example, particularly given their market share for equipment related to renewable energy and the green transition more broadly.

Our base case to June 2028 is largely unchanged from last month for the US dollar, the DXY index projected to fall from 98.1 today to 96.8 at end-2026, then 94.0 come end-2027, where it is forecast to settle. Gains for Euro and Sterling are key contributors, respectively rising from USD1.18 and USD1.35 at present up to USD1.22 and USD1.41 by end-2027.

Starting from such weak levels, the anticipated gains for Japan's Yen and Canada's dollar are also powerful supports for the US dollar downtrend. We expect USD/JPY to fall from JPY159 currently to JPY142 by mid-2028, as USD/CAD declines from CAD1.36 to CAD1.30.

If second-round inflation risks can be managed effectively without a material hit to economic growth or the labour market, further out, these currencies could experience sustained opportunities to outperform our base expectation.

It is not just core developed world currencies that are set to benefit from this turn, however. China's Renminbi has been remarkably resilient during the crisis, only edging up from around CNY6.85 at end-February to a high of CNY6.91 during March, then steadily moving lower to CNY6.82. This makes sense given China's strategic energy reserves and access to Russian and Iranian oil, among other relationships. But, once the scale and depth of China's manufacturing base across green technologies is taken into consideration, and the acute need for these goods recognised by the world ex-US, this appreciation seems likely to only be the start. To mid-2028, we therefore look for USD/CNY to fall to CNY6.35, and suspect the risks are skewed in one direction – in the Renminbi's favour.

While China's Renminbi is likely to outperform many other US dollar bilaterals over the period, seeing a rise in the currency on a trade-weighted basis, this appreciation is unlikely to upset the nation's competitive advantage. The rest of Asia in particular are likely to use the technology and know-how imported from China to improve their own capacity and lower production costs, aiding their economic performance and attractiveness to foreign capital. Each of the currencies of the region have their own starting points – Singapore's dollar is strong, Indonesia's Rupiah weak as examples – and domestic narratives to play out. But, over the course of two years, all are likely to gain against the US dollar and, to a lesser extent, other cornerstone currencies of the global system, such as Euro and Sterling.

While the uncertainty created by the Middle East conflict leaves us unsure as to when, we increasingly believe that historic safe-havens could find themselves under growing pressure over the forecast period as investors and businesses recognise the scale and breadth of developing market opportunities. These are broad across both manufacturing and service industries – along with core and technological infrastructure – and have very long runways ahead.

For the US dollar in particular, we see a heightened susceptibility, with this global outturn to follow an extended period of US' outperformance and as US geopolitical and fiscal decision making is debated at length across the globe.

Our current baseline forecast takes the US dollar DXY index near its 20-year average of 90.6, and so we will wait to see how developments break over coming weeks before considering the scale of further downward pressure the US dollar may face. For now we merely highlight that the average of the past 20 years muddies two eras, early-2015 to now when the DXY oscillated around today's level, and mid-2006 to mid-2014 when it instead averaged 80.2, 18% below spot. Coming years may well see a very different FX environment to that experienced post-pandemic.

This analysis was initially released in the April edition of Westpac Market Outlook.

NZ CPI preview, March quarter 2026

We estimate NZ consumer prices rose 0.7% in the March quarter, leaving them 2.8% higher over the past year. However, prices are set to soar over 4% later this year.

 Read full report here \(PDF 394KB\)

Calm-ish before the storm

- We estimate that New Zealand consumer prices rose by 0.7% in the March quarter. That's slightly lower than our previous forecast, reflecting updated information from Stats NZ's monthly prices report.
- The annual inflation rate is expected to dip to 2.8% (from 3.1% previously).
- But while the annual inflation rate is set to soften a little in March, this will be just a temporary reprieve. Inflation is set to rise sharply through the middle part of the year in response to the recent rise in oil prices and related increase in other costs. We expect inflation will rise to around 4.3% mid-year.
- March's lift in consumer prices is mainly due to higher prices for food and petrol.
- Under the surface, core inflation is expected to remain at firm levels.
- Our forecast is close to the RBNZ's updated forecast for 3.0% annual inflation.

NZ consumer prices were up 0.9% in Q1, with annual inflation unchanged at 3.1% The result was stronger than expected with firm underlying inflation.

Westpac forecast: +0.2%

Annual change: +2.5% (prev: +2.6%)

Consumer prices rose 0.9% in the March quarter. That saw the annual inflation rate remaining unchanged at 3.1%.

The March quarter inflation result was above the 0.7% rise we were expecting, with surprises spread across tradable and non-tradable categories.

The result was also above the RBNZ's updated forecast from their April policy update for 3% annual inflation.

Importantly, many measures of core inflation have continued to run at levels close to or above the top of the target band. For the RBNZ, that highlights the firm starting point for inflation even before the recent oil price shock.

What contributed to inflation in the March quarter?

Underpinning the March quarter rise in consumer prices were large increases in some specific areas.

- Food prices were up 1.5% over the quarter, underpinned by the usual seasonal increases in the price of fruit, as well as higher prices for confectionary (especially chocolates).
- Unsurprisingly, the other big category that has boosted inflation this quarter were transport costs. The sharp rise in oil prices over the past few weeks has left petrol prices up 3.5% over the quarter, with diesel prices up 11%. Notably, we also saw the early stages of spillovers from high fuel prices into other costs, with domestic airfares up 9% over the quarter.
- In addition to those factors, the March quarter also saw continued increases in electricity charges and the annual increase in the tobacco excise tax. There has also been a big rise in vehicle registration costs and health care costs (the latter related to the annual roll-over in the subscription subsidy).

On the downside, we saw a fall in overseas holiday accommodation costs (-4%) and international airfares (-7%). Both of those declines are seasonal, and in the case of international airfares, we are likely to see large increases over the coming months.

On the housing front, rents were flat over the quarter. That was the weakest result since 2001. It's particularly notable as the start of the year typically sees many rental agreements rolling over and larger increases in rents. This softness comes against a backdrop of low population growth and increases in housing supply, with particularly weak growth in areas like Wellington. We expect housing rental growth will remain muted for some time.

The March quarter also saw a modest 0.5% rise in the cost of a newly built home. Construction cost inflation has been muted for some time. However, there is growing pressure on materials costs, and that's likely to flow through to larger increases in building costs later in the year.

Annual and core inflation

The annual inflation rate was unchanged at 3.1% in the year to March.

Looking under the surface, prices in the domestically oriented non-tradables group rose 1.1% over the quarter (above expectations). That saw annual non-tradables inflation remaining unchanged at 3.5%.

Non-tradables inflation has been lingering above historic averages. In part, that's due to the continued large increases in administered prices, like electricity charges which rose 12.5% over the past year. However, prices in other areas have also been firm. Non-tradables excluding housing and utilities costs (which also omits rates) was 3.5% for the year (up from 3.4% at the end of last year). In seasonally adjusted terms, quarterly non-tradables inflation has been running at a rate 0.9% for most of the past year.

Tradables inflation was also hotter than expected in the March quarter (+0.7 qtr, +2.5% yr), with increases seen across a range of discretionary spending categories. That saw annual tradables inflation excluding food and fuel rising to 1.8% (up from 1.7% at the end of last year and the highest it's been since September 2023).

And over the coming quarters, tradable price inflation is set to accelerate sharply. As well as increase global fuel and transport charges, supply chain disruptions are already pushing up the prices for many imported goods.

While the past quarter did see large moves in a few specific areas like food and fuel prices, these aren't the only areas where we've seen firmness in inflation. Despite dropping back over the past year, key measures of core inflation remain in the upper part of the RBNZ's target band, and several have taken a step higher. (Note: core inflation measures smooth through the quarter-to-quarter swings in inflation and track the underlying trend in prices).

In terms of specifics:

- CPI ex-fuel inflation: +3.2% yr (vs +3.2% previously)
- CPI ex-fuel and food: +3.0% yr (vs +2.9% previously)
- 30% trimmed mean: +2.3%yr (vs +2.5% previously)
- Weighted median +1.6%yr (vs 1.7% previously)

That resilience in core inflation will be important for the RBNZ, highlighting the firm starting point for inflation even before the recent oil price shock

Outlook

This quarter's result was really just the curtain raiser. Both we and the RBNZ now expect inflation will rise to over 4% in the June quarter. We've recently updated our forecasts and had assumed annual inflation would peak at 4.3% in the June quarter, before dropping back to 3.9% by the end of this year. Today's result suggests upside risk to those forecasts

The middle part of the year will see the full brunt of the recent rise in oil prices, as well as related increases in transport and other costs. There will also be a big focus the various survey gauges of forward cost and pricing pressures over the next few months, which will be closely watch for signs of a more enduring lift in inflation.

Australian Business Conditions and Confidence, March

#confidence

Business confidence collapsed in response to the outbreak of the Middle East conflict, while current assessments of business conditions remain stable, for now. Confidence -29pts to -29 / Conditions unchanged at 6.

The March NAB Business Survey was in the field from 24 to 31 March. It provides the first complete read on business conditions and confidence since the outbreak of the Middle East conflict, the subsequent surge in fuel prices, and dual RBA rate hikes in February and March. Against this backdrop, business confidence collapsed a staggering –29pts from a neutral reading in February, representing the largest monthly decline since the onset of the pandemic in March 2020, and exceeds the fall recorded during the global financial crisis in October 2008. Confidence now sits 34pts below its long-run average. The timing and magnitude of the decline mirrors the sharp deterioration in consumer sentiment that was already evident in later responses to last month’s survey. The –12.5% decline reported in April’s Westpac-MI Consumer Sentiment survey, published earlier this morning, highlights just how sensitive sentiment is to the evolving policy and geopolitical backdrop.

Cost pressures intensified sharply in March. Purchase cost growth saw its largest monthly increase on record, with the quarterly growth pace more than doubling by 1.7ppt to 3.0%, placing it 1.9ppt above its long-run average. Final product price growth rose by a more modest, but still significant, 0.4ppt to 1.1%, suggesting firms are able to pass on some portion of the increase in fuel and oil-related input costs through prices. That said, the reported surge in costs was well in excess of prices, consistent with intensifying margin pressure and a weaker profitability reading in the month (–3pts to 1). Labour cost growth was unchanged at 1.5%.

Despite unambiguous signs of anxiety, business conditions remained broadly steady through the first quarter of 2026. The headline business conditions index was unchanged in March at 6, 1pt below its long-run average and following an earlier reading of 7 in January. This suggests firms entered this latest period of heightened uncertainty with a degree of resilience. However, on a three-month rolling average basis, the survey continues to point to a gradual easing in momentum as the elevated readings recorded late last year roll out of the calculation. The extent to which the collapse in confidence starts to bleed into current assessments of conditions will be a key dynamic to monitor over the coming months.

Outside of the aforementioned fall in profitability, the other major sub-components were unalarming. The employment sub-index rebounded in March, rising +3pts to 6, re-establishing a foothold above its long-run average. This largely reflects the lagged response of labour demand to earlier improvements in activity. The outlook for the labour market has certainly deteriorated in light of the Middle East shock, and signs of significantly weaker labour demand are likely to emerge later this year. Trading conditions dipped modestly, down 1pt to 11, consistent with early indications of softer consumer spending from the Westpac-DataX card tracker for March.

Capacity utilisation edged higher in March to 83.1%, though this increase does little to alter the broader picture, with utilisation broadly stable on a three-month average basis. Capital expenditure eased slightly following its elevated February outcome, declining -2pts to 10, but remains 4pts above its long-run average, indicating continued if cautious investment intentions.

Among other indicators, forward orders weakened, falling -7pts to -1 and recording its first below-average reading of 2026, consistent with the collapse in confidence. Inventories rose a further 2pts to 7, though this likely reflects softer trading conditions in March following the strong build-up in forward orders reported in the previous month.

The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.

Draw a line on just drawing a line

Luci Ellis
Chief Economist, Westpac Group

- You know times are uncertain when institutions start publishing scenarios alongside their normal forecasts. Two principles underlie good scenarios. First, the narrative underlying the scenario must hang together – no assuming people do things that are either individually irrational or infeasible. Second, the scenario must allow people to respond to the initial shock – avoid just drawing a price line on a graph and assuming people cannot adjust their behaviour.
- There is a tension, though, between the need to be realistic and a desire to highlight vulnerabilities or contemplate worst-case scenarios. There is a legitimate role for worst-case thinking, but it must be handled with care. Recall that even though our forecasts last year were less alarmist than many in the wake of Liberation Day, actual outcomes were even better than we had expected.
- The real value of scenarios is teasing out downstream effects and delayed responses. Sometimes the responses to temporary shocks can have lasting effects. From EV purchases to defence budgets, these could be especially important coming out of the current conflict. All the more reason to avoid just drawing a line and assuming that is the outcome.

In times as uncertain as these, you want to be able to articulate more than one possible future state of the world. That is where scenario analysis comes in. Indeed, when institutions start publishing scenarios, you can take it as a sign that things are unusually uncertain. The RBA used scenarios extensively during the pandemic. And while the IMF did not give scenarios any prominence in its previous full World Economic Outlook report in October, it did this week. Similarly, we have published several scenario iterations over the past six weeks and will provide an update later today in our Market Outlook report.

Using scenarios rather than simple uncertainty ranges or a description of risks is especially useful when the possible future states of the world are qualitatively different from the base case, and when the level of conviction about that base case is low. There is nothing wrong with a scenario that is only a little different from the base case, but it is not that interesting or informative.

Two key principles underlie good scenario analysis. First, the premise of the scenario needs to be well-grounded. The narrative motivating the initial impetus must hang together. It must be logically consistent and represent both the interests and the constraints of the actors within the system. In other words, scenarios should not assume that people do things that are either bonkers or infeasible. Individually rational behaviour that is harmful in aggregate, such as panic-buying toilet paper or conducting fire-sales of loss-making assets, should of course be allowed for, but make sure the action is indeed individually rational.

Second, the methods used in developing the scenario need to go beyond first-round thinking. You need to allow for other people to react. A good scenario cannot be just a one-off shock where nothing else changes. Sometimes it takes time for people to adjust to the new situation, so the reaction occurs with a lag. Teasing these reactions out is the value-add of the scenario.

There is a tension, though, between the need to be realistic and a desire to highlight vulnerabilities or contemplate worst-case scenarios. Sometimes a lack of realism is used to guard against a potential failure of imagination. There is a legitimate role for this approach when stress testing, for example. However, unrealistic assumptions in forecast-flavoured scenarios leave your forecasts open to misinterpretation. We have seen an example of this issue this week, where the IMF's worst-case 'severe' scenario, which implies a global recession, has sparked unhelpful talk of recession here in Australia.

“Scenario analysis is essential in uncertain times, but it must be well-grounded, not just drawing an arbitrary line on a graph.”

Part of the issue is that the IMF's less-bad 'adverse' scenario (which assumes oil prices average USD100/bbl this year before moderating to USD75 next year) and worst-case 'severe' scenario (which assumes oil prices stay around USD125/bbl from the outbreak of the conflict all the way through to end-2027) are both 'top-down' scenarios that appear to start from an assumed path for oil prices. Unlike our own scenario work, they do not explicitly model loss of supply from the Middle East and work out what prices need to do to clear the global market. By effectively just drawing a line on a graph for oil prices, the scenarios assume away any scope for other producers to respond. This is not an issue in the near term, but the longer the assumption is maintained, the less realistic it is. High prices will spur non-OPEC producers such as the US and Canada to boost production. It takes time to get that expansion running, but eventually prices will start to ease.

Because it assumes high prices right through 2027, the ‘severe’ scenario is most challenged by this issue. This is not to say that the IMF should not have published that scenario, but it is important to understand the context and what it was trying to achieve in doing so.

When developing scenarios, you also need to avoid the trap of thinking only of downside risks. Part of the problem is that downside risks usually come from identifiable events. It is easy to construct a plausible narrative for a scenario starting from “this particular bad thing happened”. But as one of my old bosses used to remind us, sometimes you should also consider the risk everything just turns out a little bit better than expected.

As our April Market Outlook goes to publication later today, it is helpful to recall last April’s edition. The ‘Liberation Day’ tariffs had been announced a fortnight previously, and many voices in the market were predicting global or US recessions. At the time we took a more moderate view, based on the principles noted above. Firstly, continuing with very high tariff rates would have been an act of economic self-harm. While it was hard to bet on the Trump administration acting rationally in a context of ‘flood the zone’ headlines and intemperate social media posts, self-interest is still the best assumption. If there is nothing preventing someone from stopping punching themselves in the face, they will stop punching.

Secondly – and this was a key judgement in our forecast last year – other countries had agency and could respond. In particular, China had scope to stimulate, and this would also cushion growth in Australia. In that context, we note that the latest Chinese GDP growth has again surprised on the upside relative to market expectations.

It turns out that even we were too bearish a year ago: the global economy did much better than expected, and global trade kept expanding with barely a hiccup. Other factors, including a tech boom, turned out to be more important than expected. Trade patterns were also re-routed around the highest tariffs, and of course the US government de-escalated, as is proving to be its pattern.

These principles also hold for other kinds of scenarios. Whenever you read a prediction of doom concerning, say, adoption of a new technology, ask yourself what is preventing people from responding to ameliorate the bad thing. What prevents macroeconomic policymakers from easing, for example, or the tax system from redistributing unequal gains? While occasionally decision-makers decide that a bad thing is good actually, holding that position is itself fragile.

Where scenarios can really add value is when they highlight a lasting effect from a temporary shock. Whether it is the person who buys an EV in response to current high petrol prices and reduces their petrol consumption permanently, or the government that reassesses its defence spending, behavioural responses can change longer-term demand trends, and so the prices that prevail further out. Normalisation after a shock does not always take you back to where you were. That is another reason why it is so important to avoid just drawing a line on a graph and calling it a scenario, ignoring system-wide effects.

Cliff Notes: conflict in the Middle East to cast a long shadow

Elliot Clarke, Head of International Economics
Ryan Wells, Economist

Our Westpac-MI Consumer Sentiment Index posted its largest fall since COVID-19, down 12.5% to a deeply pessimistic reading of 80.1. The impact from the surge in fuel prices was acute, leading to a more pronounced deterioration in the sub-indexes tracking current conditions – namely ‘family finances vs a year ago’ (–16.7%) and ‘time to buy a major household item’ (–15.0%). There were also significant hits to the year-ahead outlook for family finances (–13.9%) and the economy (–12.4%), suggesting households are bracing for enduring pressure.

The tone of the March NAB business survey was no better, business confidence collapsing 29pts from a neutral reading in February. This came alongside a notable lift in purchase cost pressures, up 1.7pts to a quarterly pace of 3.0%. That final producer prices lifted +0.4pts emphasises the rapid pass-through of surging fuel costs, but also that businesses are currently absorbing most of the increase in costs via margins, impacting profitability. The readings for current trading conditions and employment were positive, enabling business conditions to hold around its long-run average. This suggests the underlying health of the economy can be maintained if risks subside quickly.

This week we also received the March Labour Force Survey. It showed the Australian labour market was in good health prior to the Middle East conflict and the RBA's most recent rate hike. Employment growth continued to strengthen from its trough in March, from 1.0%yr to 1.5%yr on a three-month average basis, reflecting the economy's momentum through the second half of 2025 and into 2026. The unemployment rate has also held at 4.3% over the past two months, a similar level to the second half of last year. It now looks increasingly like the 4.1% prints at the turn of the year were due to temporary weakness in participation, not a sustained re-tightening.

However, given the hit to business confidence and the expectation of further policy tightening, the Middle East conflict looks set to cast a long shadow over the labour market. We expect a combination of lower average hours worked and slower employment growth, seeing the unemployment rate lift to 5.0% in early 2027. Tracking industries most exposed to the fuel shock will provide an initial take on the scale of the impact. Manufacturing, construction, transport/logistics and travel/tourism are the sectors to watch.

Offshore, an abrupt end to the first round of in-person talks between the US and Iran and the US' Navy's subsequent blockade of Iranian ports and associated vessels was the main point of conversation for markets this week. The market's take has been sanguine, the price of Brent oil retreating below US$100 and global equities rallying back to historic highs during the week. Comments made by both sides imply negotiations are ongoing and another round of in-person talks will occur before the two-week ceasefire ends in coming days. There is also the option to extend the ceasefire, if necessary.

Effectively cut off from global shipping, Iran's need for a deal is clear. But this is also the case for the US economy, University of Michigan consumer sentiment fell to a record low this week, 43% below the average of the survey since 1978. Price pressures are currently limited to first-order effects, headline CPI inflation printing at 0.9% against a core reading of just 0.2% in March. Should the conflict persist, it is highly likely second-round effects will permeate through the US economy, materially increasing the likelihood of inflation holding well above target and term interest rates trending higher. FOMC members who spoke this week all showed confidence in the underlying health of the US economy but also concern over the potential for an lasting imbalance between growth and inflation.

In contrast, China's economy showed strength this week, annual GDP growth accelerated from 4.5%yr in Q4 2025 to 5.0%yr in Q1, matching the full-year outcome for 2025. From the monthly partial data, China's Q1 momentum was principally due to the strength of exporters and associated investment, both of which are likely to receive a lasting boost from increased demand for green technology given the Middle East's impact on energy prices and supply. There is reason for guarded optimism over the outlook for property investment as well, the year-to-date decline having moderated from -17%ytd at December to -11%ytd in February and March. Still equivalent to circa 15% of GDP, an end to the sharp construction declines of recent years would provide a material boost to aggregate growth through 2026.

External demand and investment's support for GDP masks the still-troubled state of consumer demand. Having surprised to the upside in February at 2.8%ytd, in March retail sales growth slowed once again to 2.4%ytd. While not a disastrous outcome by any means, it is less than half the average pace of the past five years post pandemic, a historically weak period for household demand growth. Policy makers have been clear in their intent to provide additional support to households but are yet to action plans. And, while equities have risen through the year, house prices continue to decline, weighing on wealth and sentiment. Without broadening the growth pulse, aggregate momentum will remain susceptible to slipping towards, or through, 4.0% in coming years, even with a significant benefit from global demand for green technology.

A full update of our expectations and assessment of risks for the global economy and markets will be made available today in the April edition of Market Outlook on Westpac IQ.

Oil shock begins to surface in data

Darren Gibbs
Senior Economist

The past week has delivered some further insight on the early impact of the Middle East conflict on the New Zealand economy. Unsurprisingly, that data points to some marked changes in spending patterns and clear upward pressure on prices for energy products. Even greater impacts are certain to be evident over coming months as the shock transmits through the economy.

On Monday, BusinessNZ reported that its Performance of Services Index had declined 1.6pts in March to a 10-month low of 46.0. All five subindexes fell below 50, with the activity/sales index falling to 44.6 and the new orders/business index falling to 45.7. The employment index also fell to the lowest level since October 2024. Separately, MBIE reported a modest decline in job ads in March. However, for now, the level of advertising remains more than 10% higher than a year earlier, and we are also yet to see any sign of labour shedding in the weekly filled jobs data collected from tax records. Meanwhile, more than two-thirds of the comments submitted by respondents to the BusinessNZ survey were said to be negative, with many – especially in industries dealing with discretionary spending – unsurprisingly citing the impacts of the Middle East crisis.

BusinessNZ PMIs

Later in the week news from the retail sector provided no major surprises. Consumer spending, as measured by electronic card payments, increased 0.7%m/m in March. Unsurprisingly, with petrol prices surging almost 19% during the month, spending on fuel increased over 17%. By contrast, core spending – which excludes spending on fuel and vehicles – fell a modest 0.1%m/m. Within the core measure, while spending on consumables (groceries) and durables grew, this was more than offset by a decline in spending on apparel and hospitality. These data were broadly in line with the trends that were evident in Westpac's own card spending data, which we had published earlier in the week.

Given the outcome for March, retail spending over the March quarter grew 1.0%. This was the strongest quarter since the December 2024 quarter, consistent with our view that the economy's forward momentum had improved at the start of this year. But looking ahead, high fuel prices will continue to siphon money out of households' pockets. At the same time, they will add to costs of production for a variety of other goods and services and will continue to significantly undermine consumer confidence. Overtime, these costs will also weigh on the strong growth in tourist arrivals that has helped retailers to weather a time of relatively subdued domestic spending. We continue to anticipate that consumer spending volumes will decline slightly in the current quarter, even as the value of spending is sustained by higher prices.

Electronic card spending in retail stores

News from the housing market also provided no major surprises. Sales were down around 4% in March, reversing a 5% rise in February, and have been effectively moving sideways over the last year. The average time to sell shortened compared to February but has also remained within a narrow range and remains longer than usual. The REINZ house price index ticked up slightly in March following a 0.6% rise in February. Prices have now largely reversed the declines that we saw over the second half of 2025 and were up 0.2% from a year earlier. Conditions vary across the country, with prices trending higher in the South Island while the North Island has been more stagnant. Of course, the Middle East conflict has cast a fresh shadow of uncertainty over the economic outlook. It was unlikely that we would see an impact on the housing market as early as March, but in the months ahead we'll be watching for signs of a softening that would support our current forecast of a 1% fall in prices over this year. (Anecdotal evidence suggests greater caution amongst buyers in recent weeks.)

House prices and days to sell

Another sector that is likely to be challenged by the Middle East conflict is the tourism industry. Increased prices for flights and sharply lower consumer confidence are likely to be weighing on forward bookings, especially from long-haul countries, and this should become evident as the year progresses. However, the recent trend has been very favourable, with arrivals in February increasing for an eighth consecutive month. A notable feature of the latest data was a further improvement in arrivals from China, which until recently had continued to track far below pre-pandemic levels. Thanks to the timing of the Lunar New Year, arrivals from China was more than triple that seen in February last year. But taking the January/February period as one to remove the impact of the floating holiday timing, arrivals were still up more than 50% and just 5% below the level seen in 2019. Helpfully, this comes at a time when there appears to be some slowing in arrivals from some other markets, notably the US and South Korea.

The inflow of longer-term arrivals – new residents and those on working, educational and other visas – has also shown some signs of lifting of late. Keeping in mind that more recent observations are subject to revision, the number of migrant arrivals in February was estimated to be around 2,000 greater than the low point seen in August last year whilst the number of departures was around 3,000 less than last January's highpoint. The net inflow of 3,600 was the largest since March 2024 and the inflow for the year to February – just over 25,000 – was over 7,000 more than the preceding year. At least in part the strengthening trend is further evidence of the improved economic conditions that were developing in New Zealand prior to the Middle East conflict. Changes to visa policy have likely also contributed to the pickup in inflows.

Monthly migration flows, seasonally adjusted

Finally, the release of the Selected Prices Indexes for March has allowed us to finalise our forecast for next week's March quarter CPI report. As expected, the price of petrol increased 19% in March and the price of diesel surged 42%. However, food and some other travel-related prices such as airfares came in slightly weaker than expected. As a result, we have revised down our forecast for the CPI to 0.7%, which would see annual inflation ease back to 2.8% from 3.1% in the December quarter. Higher prices for food and petrol should make the most significant contributions, although tradable prices overall are expected to rise just 0.2% over the quarter and 2.1% over the year. Non-tradables prices are forecast to increase 0.8% over the quarter, lowering annual inflation to 3.3%. Meanwhile measures of core inflation, such as the trimmed mean and the ex-fuel and energy CPI, are expected to remain in the top half of the RBNZ's target range.

Our forecast is a little lower than the updated 3.0% forecast released by the RBNZ at its 8 April Monetary Policy Review. Assuming the CPI prints close to our expectations, the RBNZ will only take modest comfort given what lies ahead. The impact of the oil shock will become more evident when the June quarter CPI is released in July, and perhaps earlier in the monthly Selected Prices Indexes that will be released prior to the CPI. We currently estimate that annual CPI inflation will rise to 4.3% in the June quarter, although much will depend on how petrol prices evolve over coming weeks.

AUS: Mar Westpac-MI Leading Index

Apr 22, Last: +0.08%

The Leading Index growth rate held at +0.08% in February, unchanged from January but down from more firmly positive reads late last year.

The March read will again see a very mixed bag of component updates. The global energy shock has hit sentiment measures and financial markets hard. Both the Westpac-MI Consumer Expectations Index and the Westpac-MI Unemployment Expectations Index deteriorated by 10% in the latest month, the S&P/ASX200 dropping 7.8% month to month and the yield spread narrowing further. However, commodity prices firmed (up 2.1% in AUD terms) and total hours worked rose 0.5% while dwelling approvals posted a big 30% rebound from very weak reads in Dec-Jan. The net effect is hard to judge but may be more neutral than weak.

Westpac-MI Leading Index

NZ: Q1 NZIER Survey of Business Opinion (index)

Apr 21, General business confidence last: 39.5

The December quarter QSBO showed a more upbeat attitude among businesses than we've seen for some time, with both actual and expected activity picking up, and demand for workers responding accordingly. The March quarter survey will be a different matter though, coming in the wake of the Iran war, and later responses are likely to be significantly more downbeat than earlier ones. The pricing measures of the survey will show the hit from the surge in fuel costs, but more important will be firms' willingness to pass this on into their own prices. This particular measure seems to have been instrumental in kicking off both tightening and easing phases by the RBNZ in recent years.

Quarterly Survey of Business Opinion

NZ: Q1 Consumer Prices (%)

Apr 21, Quarterly last: 0.6, Westpac f/c: 0.7
Annual last: 3.1, Westpac f/c: 2.8, RBNZ f/c: 3.0

We estimate that New Zealand consumer prices rose by 0.7% in the March quarter, underpinned by higher prices for food and petrol. The annual inflation rate is expected to dip from 3.1% to 2.8%, slightly below the RBNZ's forecast of 3.0% (updated at its April Monetary Policy Review). Under the surface, core inflation is expected to remain at firm levels. While the annual inflation rate is set to soften a little in March, this will be just a temporary reprieve. Inflation is set to rise sharply through the middle part of the year in response to the recent rise in oil prices and related increases in other costs. We expect inflation will rise to around 4.3% mid-year.

Card activity points to continued slowing in non-fuel spend

Read full report  'Westpac Card Tracker, 17 April 2026' (PDF 617KB)

The Westpac-DataX Card Tracker Index declined 2.2pts over the three weeks to April 11, reflecting a mix of factors including the fuel excise tax cut, some easing in the pull-forward of fuel purchases and a continued moderation in non-fuel segments.

Quarterly momentum remains subdued, card activity up 1.2% over the March quarter, tracking at a similar 1.1% pace as at mid-April. That is a material slowing on the 2% average seen over the June, September and December quarters last year. Notably, non-fuel spend is tracking a more subdued 0.7-0.9%qtr pace.

Monthly growth has been very choppy, the fuel price spike and lift in volumes driving a 1.9% gain in the March month but the temporary halving in fuel excise tax contributing to a pull back in the first two weeks of April, the latest week tracking a monthly decline of 0.5%. Non fuel activity rose 0.5% in the March month but is tracking a monthly contraction of 1.1% as at mid-April.

While the card data is adjusted for regular seasonal patterns, including Easter, some of the softness in April may be a residual holiday-related drag.

The softening in non-fuel card activity continues to mainly centre on international spend (some of which may be due to cancelled overseas travel) and discretionary services (particularly accommodation and recreational services) but is starting to become more apparent in discretionary goods as well, particularly housing-related categories.

The slowing continues to be broad-based, reflecting the common drivers of around both fuel and non fuel spend.

Overall, the 1.2%qtr rise in card activity in the March quarter is likely to be flat or down slightly once adjusted for price effects. The Q1 CPI, due April 29, will give a better sense of how activity has tracked in real, inflation-adjusted terms. Note that the total spending measures in the Q1 national accounts (due June 3) will be somewhat firmer due to effects from the roll-off electricity rebates.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. The forecasts given above are predictive in character. Whilst every effort has been taken to ensure that the assumptions on which the forecasts are based are reasonable, the forecasts may be affected by incorrect assumptions or by known or unknown risks and uncertainties. The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.

On hoping you'll be wrong

Luci Ellis
Chief Economist, Westpac Group

- The economy does not care about your feelings, so forecasts must reflect what you think is the most likely outcome, not necessarily what you wish would happen. This distinction is especially salient now. The outright fall in global fuel supply has different implications than other recent supply shocks, and the outlook for Australia and the world is rough.
- The ceasefire announced this week was obviously welcome, but the question is whether the Strait of Hormuz opens properly. The first 24 hours after the announcement were not promising. But if it does, that would be a better outcome than the baseline forecast update we released last week. We would be happy if our baseline forecast was wrong for this reason.
- The key issue for Australia, and for the domestic interest rate outlook, is how much of the energy price shock is already being passed through to prices of other goods and services. The RBA will be watching for this kind of behaviour, including through its liaison program, and will see it as a further leg up in underlying inflation from a rate that was already higher than desired.

The thing about forecasting is that your preferences do not matter. A baseline scenario is simply what you think is most likely. It is not necessarily what you wish would happen. And of course things could play out differently. It is the role of scenario and risk-sensitivity analysis to articulate these other possible future states of the world.

The disconnect between what you hope will happen and what you think will actually happen is especially salient now. The near-term outlook for Australia is tough: higher inflation, with consumers again squeezed by some combination of higher interest rates, lower income growth and higher unemployment. Things are even worse for many other countries. Australia has been able to leverage its LNG exports to ensure we have – so far – not been left short of other fuels. Many lower-income countries do not have this advantage and have been facing the prospect of shortages and rationing; some of our neighbours in the Pacific are particularly hard-hit.

The economic shock from the Gulf conflict centres on global oil and gas supply. It is different from COVID, when the disruptions were all the way down supply chains. It also differs from the energy shock following Russia's invasion of Ukraine, where the Russian oil and gas supply did not disappear, it just needed time to be redistributed to non-European nations willing to buy it despite the sanctions; the peak decline in its oil output was estimated to be around 3 million barrels per day, but the disruption faded quickly. This time around, the oil and gas are not getting out of the Persian Gulf. Some production has been redirected through Saudi pipelines to other ports, but not all of it. Current estimates are that the net reduction of global production has been 8–9 million barrels per day for oil and one-fifth of pre-war global supply for gas. And at the same time, Russia's output capacity has been reduced by successful Ukrainian attacks on Russian oil infrastructure; news reports suggest this has cut global output by a further 0.7–1 million barrels per day.

The effect on prices from such a cut to capacity was always going to be severe.

“Forecasts are an assessment of the most likely outcome, not the preferred one.”

News this week that a two-week ceasefire had been agreed was obviously welcome. Assuming it holds well enough to reopen the Strait of Hormuz properly – a big if given the attacks in the 24 hours following its announcement – it would be a better outcome than the baseline update we released last week, and one of the “risks on both sides” we contemplated when we released it. A lasting ceasefire and faster opening up of the Strait would put energy prices on a trajectory between the one we contemplated in last week's baseline, and the one underpinning the forecasts in the March Market Outlook. A return to pre-war prices is unlikely in the short term, though, given the damage to oil and gas infrastructure in the Gulf states and in Russia.

Even if the ceasefire holds well enough that the Strait stays open, a key watchpoint is whether ships enter the Gulf during the next two weeks, not just whether those previously stuck there leave. If ships do not enter, the next wave of production will not be able to be shipped. Supply will sag again a few weeks later and prices will rebound, especially for refined product.

If the ceasefire does not hold, the reprieve on fuel supply will be brief. Trust between the parties is low and Iranian control of the Strait – even jointly with Oman – is an unstable equilibrium that is unacceptable to much of the rest of the world. Even if the ceasefire gets back on track after its rocky start, flare-ups later in the year cannot be ruled out.

The real question for Australia, and for the domestic interest rate outlook, is how much of the energy price shock is already being passed through to prices of other goods and services. On this there is less cause for optimism. While 'temporary fuel levies' are easier to unwind as fuel prices decline, for many products, list prices have been lifted significantly and a reversal seems less likely. Building materials are a particular issue, with the cost of building a detached home increasing as much as 10%, on our preliminary estimates. The lift in pricing has been widespread across industries and in some cases quite large relative to overall inflation trends. The RBA will be watching for this kind of behaviour, including through its liaison program, and will see it as a further leg up in underlying inflation from a rate that was already higher than desired.

Our next forecast round, scheduled for release next week, will contemplate both the case where traffic through the Strait remains disrupted and one where the ceasefire holds.

If the ceasefire does hold, downside risks to growth diminish and inflation risks ease. Because of the downstream pass-through to other prices we are already seeing, though, the inflation risks do not disappear and the RBA is still likely to raise the cash rate further. Still, it would be a better outcome than our current published baseline. This would be one of the instances where we would be quite happy to be wrong.

Cliff Notes: ceasefire optimism to be tested

Elliot Clarke, Head of International Economics

Mantas Vanagas, Senior Economist

Ryan Wells, Economist

Ahead of the worst of the current conflict, the ABS' household spending indicator gained 0.3% in February, in line with January's result and the trend pace of the past two years. Services continued to drive growth overall, aided in particular by holiday-related spending. Goods spending only managed a 0.1% gain, however, remaining weak.

Our Westpac-DataX Card Tracker suggests spending growth is likely to moderate in coming months as higher energy prices and weaker sentiment are felt, though a lasting end to hostilities could ease concern and see households look through some of the cost shock already in train. Geopolitical considerations are challenging for market participants to digest, let alone households and small business. For these individuals, in the fulness of time, pricing responses and time delays up and down the supply chain could prove as, or more, significant than the energy market dynamics currently being witnessed. Risks for the Australian consumer are therefore likely to linger.

In New Zealand, the RBNZ maintained the stance of policy as expected. However, our New Zealand team took the commentary to be hawkish, with a particular focus on second-round inflation pressures. The RBNZ's short-term inflation forecast is now 4.2%yr at June 2026, in line with Westpac NZ Economics' 4.1%yr projection. As a result, Westpac's expected timing for the first hike for the coming cycle has been brought forward from December to September 2026, with the risk of a further acceleration if evidence of second-round inflation impacts accumulates.

Further afield, the data flow was concentrated in the US and mixed in tone. Over the Easter long weekend, nonfarm payrolls rebounded 178k in March, bringing the three-month average back up to 68k compared to an average monthly outcome of -8k in the second half of 2025 and 10k over the full year. The unemployment rate was also consistent with labour supply and demand being in balance in March, edging back down to 4.3%. Note though, this outcome was due to a further decline in the participation rate (now down 0.7ppts since April 2025) rather than an increase in household survey employment.

The weak outcomes for employment through late-2025 look to increasingly be affecting household demand – indeed, the downward revision to Q4 GDP to just 0.5% annualised was in part due to sub-par consumption growth (1.9% annualised).

Since the turn of the year, momentum looks to have slowed further, with real personal consumption expenditure up just 0.1% in February after a flat January. With business investment soft and susceptible to downside risks (core goods order growth in Q1-to-date is less than a third of the pace registered in Q4), US Q1 GDP growth looks likely to maintain a pace well below trend, closer to Q4's third estimate than the 1.3% annualised pace currently projected by the Atlanta Fed's GDPNow nowcast. This is before the sentiment and cost of living shock emanating from the Middle East is felt.

“pricing responses and time delays... could prove as, or more, significant than the energy market dynamics”

The above outcomes are unlikely to materially alter FOMC member's baseline view and overall risk assessment. While the latest meeting minutes indicate “a vast majority of participants” see “risks to the employment side of the mandate... [as] skewed to the downside”, the labour market is considered to be in good health overall. Active risk assessment is therefore likely to focus more on price uncertainty, both with respect to the initial jump in energy prices and second-round effects which, over time, could build greater persistence into the core inflation pulse. This is not to say that the FOMC will vote on hiking interest rates anytime soon, in contrast to the RBA and RBNZ, but it likely means debate over a need to cut further will be deferred for the foreseeable future.

A hawkish RBNZ is prepared to act decisively

Kelly Eckhold
Chief Economist NZ

Views on the likely duration and the severity of the war waxed and waned over the week as markets wavered between the prospect of an end to a civilization (as mooted by President Trump) and the alternative of world peace in our time. The reality remains cloudy and the prospects of a long bumpy road ahead remain the base case. This week the RBNZ channelled these themes of uncertainty and the prospect of potentially longer-lived inflationary impacts, by delivering a hawkish hold. We brought forward our view of when the OCR will begin to normalise and have further fine-tuned how the overall tightening cycle may evolve.

The Iran war and its impacts on New Zealand remained front and centre this week. It's very well understood that the impact will critically depend on the size and duration of the disruption to global energy supply. And this week we saw the full gamut of possibilities on how the war could impact on New Zealand. Businesses and consumers have taken an initial pessimistic view of how the war will impact the operating environment. The questions now are whether those views will be borne out and just how far off course will inflation be knocked and for how long.

The early part of the week was dominated by Trump's Tuesday deadline to Iran to reopen the Straits of Hormuz to traffic or suffer devastating attacks on civilian infrastructure. Fortunately (and as frankly had seemed most likely) cooler heads prevailed, with a hastily arranged cease-fire "deal" announced that at the least allows for a couple of weeks of breathing space for further negotiations towards a permanent truce to occur. That at least is an advance on where we have been in the last six weeks, which had seen little evidence that discussions were even occurring between key players in Iran, Israel and the US. Initial negotiations will take place this weekend and reports concerning these will help determine the tone when markets reopen on Monday.

News of the ceasefire has seen a marked reduction in the risk premia evident in oil and refined products markets, resulting in a fall in prices. However, we think that the reality around the opposing parties' views on the "deal" means the prospect for a quick resolution of the situation looks low. As we stand today nothing has really changed in terms of New Zealand's medium-term fuel security situation as no meaningful increase in tanker flows out the Persian Gulf is occurring. That said, news that Asian refineries are securing crude feedstock from elsewhere – notably the US – was welcome. This would appear to lower the near-term risk of interruption to fuel inflows into New Zealand. This provides breathing space for the government to work on additional storage options and to fine-tune plans for the hopefully unlikely situation where interventions to allocate scarce fuel stocks become necessary.

This week the RBNZ channelled the themes of uncertainty about the outlook, but also realism on just how long-lasting the impact of the war might have on the economy and inflation outlook. The tone of the RBNZ's commentary shifted from the relatively sanguine approach that Governor Breman had communicated a couple of weeks ago. We signalled in our OCR preview that such a shift could be in the offing as the broader MPC had a greater opportunity to weigh in. And it seems the MPC was presented some initial forecasts which showed a markedly higher inflation profile was in the offing.

The MPC seems to have separated into a couple of camps: a more hawkish group that sees an argument for a proactive approach to lean against potentially persistent inflation pressures with a higher OCR from perhaps in May or July; and a more dovish camp that's happier to take more time to assess given the possibility that the activity implications of the oil shock could dampen inflation over the medium term. That latter group might perhaps be happier to wait until later in the year before beginning to raise rates, but even among this group there seems no appetite for OCR cuts. Hence, as it was before the Iran war, the issue for the MPC is when, not if, to tighten.

One interesting tidbit from the RBNZ's communications was the sense that coming into the war the economy was gathering momentum following a slightly disappointing December quarter. The RBNZ retains optimism that economic momentum won't be unduly undermined by the war given the assumption that it will be over relatively soon. Certainly, some of the data seemed to support that optimism given that the Business NZ PMI for March showed resilience by falling only modestly, although understandably respondents expressed more concerns in the comments submitted with their responses. The ANZ's Heavy Traffic Index – a measure of commercial traffic flows – was also resilient in March, although light traffic volumes declined, likely reflecting higher fuel prices. We also notice that weekly filled jobs trends continued to track in line with year earlier levels through March, suggesting that any job shedding due to the war has not started.

This more hawkish take from the MPC prompted us to bring forward when we expect OCR increases to begin, from December to September 2026. We expect 25bp interest rate hikes at each meeting from then until the OCR reaches 3.5% – at which point the OCR will be firmly in the neutral zone from the RBNZ's perspective. After then, the outlook is cloudier and we expect a slower approach where the OCR increases at Monetary Policy Statements only and the pace of tightening accordingly slows. We continue to believe that the same shape of the latter part of the interest rate cycle where the OCR rises above our assessment of neutral (which remains at 3.75%), peaking at 4.25% in December 2027 and remaining at 4.25% through 2028 before returning to 3.75% in 2029. Hence, we have brought forward our OCR profile by two meetings.

RBNZ Official Cash Rate

There is a lot of uncertainty about how the economic outlook will play out for obvious reasons. Hence, we think that it's easier to break down the entire interest rate cycle into two components: the initial move of the OCR from stimulatory levels to the neutral zone; and then what happens from there. For now, we suspect it will be easier to get a handle on the first part of the cycle. And indeed, the bar to starting the lift-off of the OCR towards neutral levels is likely a lot lower than moving the OCR above neutral and beyond.

The key focus for the MPC seems to be what the high-frequency data can tell them about the peak in inflation, but especially how persistent inflation pressures are likely to be. Top of mind are indicators of inflation expectations (especially medium-term expectations), firm pricing behaviour and wage growth trends. The reality is that little will be learned about wage setting trends for some time – and indeed stronger wage growth if in the offing is more likely a 2027 than a 2026 story. So, the focus should be on what we can learn from the monthly inflation expectations surveys, the Quarterly Survey of Business Opinion and monthly Selected Price Indices to see if there are signs of broad and potentially persistent inflation pressures.

Looking to the week ahead, there are several data releases to watch. On Monday, we'll get the March Business NZ PSI which will provide a snapshot of how the service sector has been tracking coming into the current period. Later in the week, we'll get updates on migration and house sales. The latter is likely to show that house price growth has remained muted, with abundant supply and upward pressure on borrowing costs keeping a lid on prices.

On Friday we'll get updates on both selected consumer prices and retail spending for March. Those releases will warrant close attention, with the impacts of the Middle East conflict likely to be evident. On retail spending, we're expecting a fuel-related rise in spending as prices rocketed higher over the month and many people rushed to fill their tanks ahead of further price increases. However, increased spending on essentials like fuel and groceries is weighing on spending in other areas such as hospitality. As a result, core (ex-fuel) spending is likely to be down. On the price front, March's Selected Prices update will show a sharp rise in fuel costs. The big question is how those costs are rippling through the economy more broadly. The full impact of those indirect fuel price rises won't be evident until later this year. However, we will see some early impacts, with airlines announcing large increases in domestic and international airfares during the month.

AUS: Apr Westpac-MI Consumer Sentiment (index)

Apr 14, Last: 91.6

Consumer sentiment edged 1.2% higher to 91.6 in March from 90.5 in February. The survey was conducted in the first week of the month, during the initial outbreak of conflict in the Middle East but prior to the RBA's 25bp rate hike in the third week of the month. While the survey as a whole showed a slight improvement, daily responses showed a material weakening over the course of the survey week with responses captured in the last three days of the week consistent with an index read of just 84.

The April survey is in the field over the week ending April 11. It will almost certainly show a decline with the Middle East conflict escalating (albeit with a ceasefire announced on April 8) and big spike in fuel prices (up +44c a litre vs last month). With last month's RBA rate hike and wider inflation fears also in the mix, sentiment looks primed for a sizeable fall.

AUS: Mar Labour Force – Employment Change (000s)

Apr 16, Last: 48.9, Westpac f/c: 25
Market f/c: 20.0, Range: 5.0 to 35.0

Feb's gain in employment was firmer than expected, but it was partly a result of a shift in seasonal patterns around marginally attached workers, resulting in softer Jan reads and stronger Feb reads for employment.

Having now moved past this seasonal dynamic, we have pencilled in a lift in employment of +25k for March – slightly firmer than the average gain over the preceding twelve months, reflecting the pre-conflict trend of firming employment growth.

The March survey was in the field from March 1 to 14. This will garner significant interest given it is the first official economic data release that overlaps the Middle East conflict. However, it is far too early to detect any meaningful shift in broad labour market conditions in response. See our preview here.

Employment growth moving past its trough

AUS: Mar Labour Force – Unemployment Rate (%)

Apr 16, Last: 4.3, Westpac f/c: 4.2
Market f/c: 4.3, Range: 4.2 to 4.4

The unemployment rate lifted from 4.1% over Dec/Jan to 4.3% in Feb, taking it back to the levels seen through most of the second half of last year. The increase was mainly due to a lift in the participation rate, from 66.7% to 66.9%.

Lower prints for unemployment around in Dec/Jan came from lower labour force participation – while employment growth was weak, growth in the size of the labour force was even weaker, resulting in apparent 're-tightening'.

For March, we have pencilled in a slight dip in the participation rate to 66.8%, seeing the unemployment rate tick down to 4.2%. Looking further ahead, we think the unemployment rate will rise to 5% by year-end. See our preview here.

NZ: Mar REINZ House Sales and Prices (%yr)

Apr 15, Sales last: 0.3, Prices last: 0.0

February was a perkier month for the housing market, with a lift in the number of sales and a 0.6% seasonally adjusted rise in prices. However, neither measure has escaped from the generally sideways trend of the last year or so. Low mortgage rates are supporting demand, but the ample supply of homes on the market, low population growth and falling rents mean that there is a lack of pressure on house prices. The move higher in fixed-term mortgage rates in recent months has likely weighed on investor sentiment as well.

NZ: Mar Selected Prices (%mth)

Apr 17

The SPI covers around 50% of the full CPI (out 21 April) and will provide an early read on how the Middle East conflict has affected inflation pressures. Petrol prices are estimated to be up 20% over the past month with diesel prices up 50%. Importantly, those higher fuel prices have been flowing through to other prices. While the full impact of those indirect price rises won't be evident until later this year, March did see large increases in domestic and international airfares. There could be some related softness in other prices, like holiday accommodation, but that would only offset a small proportion of the other cost increases were seeing. On the housing front, we're expecting to see continued softness in rents.

NZ: Mar Retail Card Spending (%mth)

Apr 17, Last: 1.4, Westpac: 0.5

We're expecting a 0.5% rise in retail card spending in March. But underlying that is an ugly breakdown of spending across categories. Underpinning the expected rise in spending is the large increases in petrol and diesel prices over the past month as a result of the Middle East war. We also saw households rushing to fill tanks and keep them full. We're also expecting a pick-up in grocery food spending, in part due to concerns about shortages which saw some households stocking up. However, core spending (ex fuel) is likely to be down over the month, with higher fuel prices and increased spending on essentials likely to see households reining in their spending in discretionary areas. In particular, we expect a sharp fall in hospitality spending.

China: Q1 GDP

Apr 16, %y/y, Last: 4.5%, Mkt f/c: 4.8%, WBC f/c: 4.8%

China’s authorities achieved their 5.0% growth ambition in 2025, albeit with an abnormally large contribution from net exports and despite persistent weakness in household demand. Given the scale of their trade surplus and China’s dominant position in global manufacturing, such a feat will be very difficult to repeat in 2026 and beyond.

This year, growth is likely to be softer, closer to 4.5% than 5.0%, and will increasingly rely on the consumer and domestically-focused investment (housing and infrastructure) as trade provides support only at the margin.

In getting a read on growth opportunities in 2026, the monthly activity data to March will be as important as the GDP detail. This is true both for the baseline view and the risks.

A hawkish RBNZ is prepared to act decisively

Views on the likely duration and the severity of the war waxed and waned over the week as markets wavered between the prospect of an end to a civilisation (as mooted by President Trump) and the alternative of world peace in our time. The reality remains cloudy and the prospects of a long bumpy road ahead remain the base case. The RBNZ channelled these themes of uncertainty and the prospect of potentially longer-lived inflationary impacts, by delivering a hawkish hold. We brought forward our view of when the OCR will begin to normalise and have further fine-tuned how the overall tightening cycle may evolve.

The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.

Revised RBA rates view: two extra hikes, 4.85% peak, later reversal

Luci Ellis
Chief Economist, Westpac Group

We have revised our view of the outlook for RBA policy, adding two further hikes to the near-term profile and pushing out the eventual reversal. We now expect 25bp rate hikes at the 16 June and 11 August decisions, in addition to the 25bp hike we already expected at the May meeting. The peak for the cash rate is now expected to be 4.85%.

This shift reflects the longer disruption to and slower recovery in fuel supply assumed in the revised baseline forecasts we first published on Friday afternoon, with the Strait of Hormuz essentially closed for eight weeks and traffic recovering only slowly after that. It also reflects the surprisingly rapid pass-through of higher fuel and other oil-derived product prices into other prices in Australia. We believe the RBA will respond to this pricing behaviour by tightening monetary policy by more than would have been needed absent that pass-through.

The halving of fuel excise, announced by national cabinet today, reduces the near-term outlook for headline CPI inflation, but a peak of 5.4%yr in June quarter remains likely. The announcement also does not affect prices of other oil-related products, including aviation fuel and various plastics, or any price increases from damage to gas and other production facilities in non-combatant Gulf states. Much of the second-round pass-through of prices is therefore likely to remain in place, and we continue to expect trimmed mean inflation to peak around 4%yr later this year.

The higher cash rate profile will weigh on Australia's economic outlook. Growth will be slower, especially consumption, and the labour market will be softer. We expect unemployment to peak around 5%, somewhat higher than the 4.7% peak we flagged last week. Headline inflation will dip below 2½% by mid 2027 and will remain in the lower half of the 2–3% target range through to 2028. Trimmed mean inflation will take a little longer to decline, but will be back in the target range in 2028.

A companion note, also to be released this afternoon, fleshes out the rest of the forecasts. The revisions incorporate the assumed longer closure of the Strait of Hormuz and other supply disruptions in the Middle East flagged last week. In addition, we have updated for the new profile for the cash rate, the changes to fuel excise and some other recent events.

Despite the weaker economic outlook and potential undershoot of the inflation target implied by these revised forecasts, we think the RBA will be slow to reverse this policy tightening and risks getting behind the curve in coming years. We push out the date for rate cuts and pencil in four rate cuts, one per quarter in February, May, August and November 2028. We have low conviction about the exact timing.

The RBA will have already been spooked by the way inflation kicked up late last year after it took back some of its earlier rate hikes (though the usual lags of policy imply that the cuts were not the cause of that increase in inflation). We therefore suspect that the unwind of the current policy tightening will involve something of a “one bitten, twice shy” mentality. Second-round pass-through to other prices and costs will only increase the RBA's reluctance to unwind the current policy tightening.

“we continue to expect trimmed mean inflation to peak around 4%yr later this year.”

We also believe the RBA's evolving intellectual framework will militate against an early reversal of these hikes. A supply shock such as the one the world is now facing should ordinarily be looked through to the extent possible, so long as longer-term inflation expectations remain anchored. Because it believes Australia is starting from a position of little spare capacity, though, the RBA sees the supply shocks as a potential reason to have both a restrictive stance of policy and to revise up its view of what constitutes restrictive policy.

The RBA has insisted that it retains its earlier strategy of holding onto as much of the post-pandemic employment gains as possible, subject to meeting the inflation target. While inflation was actually in the 2–3% target range for part of last year, underlying inflation did not get all the way back to the 2½% target midpoint before lifting again. This is clearly being interpreted in some quarters as inflation having been above target continuously. The Monetary Policy Board will therefore want to demonstrate its commitment to returning inflation back to target expeditiously and its willingness to do what it sees as necessary to achieve this.

As noted last week, there are risks on both sides of our revised baseline view. Iran is already letting some ships through the Strait, and it is possible that fuel supply recovers faster than we are currently assuming. It is also possible that a consensus forms domestically to resist second-round inflation, especially where the flow-on of higher costs to downstream prices could be construed as excessive. On the more inflationary side, it is possible that the war drags on longer, or domestic pass-through is stronger than we currently expect.

Forecast changes

- RBA now expected to hike rates three times (May, June, August), revised up from one more (in May) previously. Peak cash rate now 4.85%, above previous peak.
- Longer Middle East disruption lifts peak prices for oil and gas, lengthens recovery. Infrastructure damage exacerbates the shock. Brent oil now expected to peak at an average $120/bbl in Q2 and Japanese LNG prices at $26mmbtu.
- Australian CPI inflation now expected to peak at 5.4%yr in June quarter, and even higher on the monthly series, despite the announced cut to fuel excise. Trimmed mean inflation peaks around 4% in 2026 H2. Food prices a particular concern through to 2028, but broader pass-through to non energy prices also an issue.
- Supply shock and tight monetary policy drag on demand, especially consumption and other interest-sensitive sectors. GDP growth forecast to trough at 1%yr in 2026, and remain subdued at 1.6%yr in 2027; unemployment rate peaks at 5% end-2026.

Cliff Notes: mixed messages

Elliot Clarke, Head of International Economics

At the turn of the week, Chief Economist Luci Ellis and Westpac Economics highlighted how severe the inflationary impact is expected to be for Australia. Recognising the extreme uncertainty surrounding the conflict and the passage of time, we extended our baseline supply assumption from a one to two-month complete shutdown of the Strait of Hormuz followed by a protracted recovery in transit from 20% of pre-conflict supply in May to normal supply at year end. Also, a consequence of elevated refining margins globally, annual Australian consumer inflation is now expected to peak around 6%yr in mid-Q2. While headline inflation will fall back to target over the following year, trimmed mean inflation is forecast to remain above 3.0%yr until end-2027 and only settle in the middle of the target range in late-2028, having peaked at 4.0%yr at end-2026.

With Australia already experiencing tight capacity and elevated domestic inflation pressures, attested to again by the RBA in the March Monetary Policy Board meeting minutes, the Middle East conflict warrants pre-emptive action by the RBA through three 25bp cash rate hikes in May, June and August 2026 to 4.85%. Policy is then seen on hold until 2028, when success with inflation should allow the cash rate to be reduced by 100bps steadily through the year. The consequence for GDP is likely to be a deceleration to just 1.0%yr in 2026, followed by a sub-par 1.6%yr gain in 2027, then an above-trend 2.8%yr recovery in 2028. The unemployment rate is forecast to rise to 5.0% at end-2026, and to take until end-2028 to return to its full employment level, circa 4.5%.

To the above forecasts, time matters a great deal. If, as has been mooted in recent days (and may be confirmed in a Presidential address later today), the Trump administration calls a quick end to the US' strikes against Iran, Australian GDP and the labour market may receive a reprieve. That said, heightened inflation will remain an acute risk while transit and supply-chain disruptions persist, and businesses may also take the opportunity to re-set margins. The balance between inflation and activity risks will therefore remain in focus for the RBA over the coming year. Ahead of the Federal Budget, the Government's financial position is also in flux, although current conditions look more likely to prove a positive than negative at this stage.

Local data out this week meanwhile focused on housing. Cotality home values increased a solid 0.6% in March. Although affordability saw a divergence in conditions city by city, with prices down a touch in Sydney and Melbourne as strong growth continued in Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth. Where conditions are weakest, reduced turnover is holding prices up. Dwelling approvals remained volatile in February, a 29.7% monthly gain lifting the annual growth rate to 14%yr. Australia clearly has need for significant, sustained additions to housing supply across our major cities, but affordability and the cost of construction are material risks which are likely to persist into the medium term.

“heightened inflation will remain an acute risk while transit and supply-chain disruptions persist”

Offshore, the list of data worthy of mention was short this week. University of Michigan consumer sentiment was, unsurprisingly, weak in March, 19% below the 5-year average and 37% under the full-history benchmark. The Conference Board's measure showed greater resilience but was still weak versus history. That said, ADP private payrolls continued to grow in March, and the retail sales control group recorded a solid gain of 0.5%mt. The ISM manufacturing index for March was also favourable, although the survey only caught the beginning of disruptions related to the Middle East conflict and the detail was also mixed, with production up, new orders down and employment contracting. China's official PMIs emphasised the nation's ability to weather uncertainty, with both the manufacturing and services indexes higher in March.

The key international data release for the week is still to come on Friday night. The US March employment report will be closely scrutinised after February's weak detail reset participants current understanding and expectations for the labour market. US policy makers have been more focused on inflation risks in recent weeks, but another poor employment result could see them reconsider this view. In contrast, a rebound in job creation will likely see market pricing for near-term policy decisions shift materially in favour of a hike, or two, as has been the case elsewhere across the developed world.

Not hawkish. Not dovish. Balanced.

Satish Ranchhod
Senior Economist

The RBNZ meets next week for its April Monetary Policy Review (Wednesday 8 April, NZ 2pm). As discussed in our preview, in the absence of major developments in the Middle East over the coming days, the RBNZ is set to leave the Official Cash Rate (OCR) at 2.25%. However, rather than the immediate OCR decision, the key focus will be on how the RBNZ is balancing the significant challenges stemming from the conflict in the Middle East and what that implies for the longer-term policy outlook.

Since the RBNZ last met in February, the risks around the economic outlook have changed significantly. Economic growth in the final quarter of last year has already come in below the RBNZ's forecast. More significantly, disruptions stemming from the war in the Middle East mean that growth over 2026 is now also likely to fall well short of the RBNZ's previous forecast. We expect the economy to grow just 1.9% in the year to December, well below the February MPS forecast for growth of 2.8%. We also expect a higher track for the unemployment rate.

At the same time, inflation is set to run much hotter than the RBNZ had expected over 2026. We're forecasting that inflation will peak around 4.1% around the middle of this year before softening a little to 3.8% by year's end – well above the RBNZ's previous year-end forecast for 2.4%. Our stronger inflation outlook is mainly due to the direct impact of higher oil prices (i.e., higher prices for petrol and diesel). However, even if global oil prices were to drop back now, inflation is still set to linger above the RBNZ's forecast over the remainder of this year, as disruptions to supply chains and other related increases in costs of production will take time to dissipate.

RBNZ Governor Breman has already outlined how she is thinking about those challenges in a recent speech. That speech described an orthodox (and sensible) approach to monetary policy in the face of a supply shock, of which the current oil price is a typical example. The Governor noted that the RBNZ would not react to the immediate fuel-related lift in inflation. The RBNZ can't offset a rise in oil prices that has already occurred with higher interest rates now, but doing so would compound the downward pressure on growth. Furthermore, with interest rates taking around 12 to 18 months to have their maximum impact, hiking rates now would potentially result in an even deeper fall in inflation at the same time as the eventual falls in oil prices will naturally pull it lower.

Instead, the focus for the RBNZ will be the longer-term outlook for inflation. And this is where things start to get murky. The key issue for the RBNZ is whether the current sharp rise in prices will have lingering effects, resulting in higher inflation even when oil prices eventually ease. That could occur if businesses come to expect continued large increases in operating costs and raise their prices accordingly. There's also the risk that we see demands for higher-than-normal cost-of-living increases as workers try to recoup the current loss of spending power. Both of those risks are very plausible given that we've recently been through an extended period of high inflation and related pressure on businesses' operating costs. And if those risks do materialise, the current uplift in inflation could end up being much more protracted.

It will take some time before we know whether those longer-term inflation risks (sometimes referred to as 'second round' impacts of an oil price shock) are manifesting. The starting point for the economy is important on this front and provides some cause for optimism. Soft activity in recent years has left the New Zealand economy with a high level of spare capacity, including a higher-than-average unemployment rate. That will limit the ability to push through larger increases in output prices or wages (though that does also imply related pressure on margins and households' purchasing power).

GDP growth forecasts

We are already seeing reports of businesses raising their prices due to the direct impact of increases in fuel prices on their operating costs (e.g., higher fares and fuel surcharges within the land transport industry). Perhaps of more concern for the RBNZ, the latest ANZ Business Outlook Survey (which was conducted following the outbreak of the war) showed a sharp rise in inflation expectations, along with increases in the number of businesses who said they are planning to increase their prices. That said, given the outlook for inflation, it would be surprising if surveyed inflation expectations did not rise in the near-term. Some comfort might be taken from firms' expectations for wage growth. These remained muted in the survey, suggesting that firms are not expecting current cost increases to feed a wage-price spiral.

The RBNZ's discussion of how its balancing the impact on growth and near-term inflation will be crucial for how markets react next week. Markets have been very focused on the rise in inflation pressures and related hawkish comments from other central banks. That's seen financial markets also pulling forward expectations for rate hikes here: at the time of writing, market pricing was consistent with an 60% chance of an OCR hike in July, and just over two hikes are priced in before the end of the year.

In its communications on 8 April, the RBNZ will balance a desire to avoid a further tightening of financial conditions with the desire to not sound complacent about the medium-term inflation risks that come with an energy price shock. Reinforcement of the approach communicated in Governor Breman's speech guidance should continue to lean against the market's current pricing for earlier rate hikes, especially as liquidity issues in the domestic market continue to ease. We continue to forecast just one 25bp hike this year, but also that significant tightening will occur in 2027 once the activity implications of the energy shock begin to dissipate.

The RBNZ's guidance about what to expect at future meetings will also likely echo the Governor's speech. In crafting this guidance, the MPC will aim to reassure markets that it will not overreact to the shock, which could cause markets to further tighten financial conditions. At the same time, the RBNZ will need to ensure it sounds credible to households and businesses about its willingness to tighten policy if inflation expectations and pricing behaviour evolve in a manner inconsistent with achieving the inflation target over the medium-term. While monetary policy should look through a temporary spike in energy prices, the MPC will need to be vigilant – and be seen to be vigilant – against the risk that inflation becomes persistent.

As we discuss in our latest Hawks, doves, and kiwis note, there are clearly risks on both sides for the OCR. Governor Breman's recent speech did draw on feedback from other MPC members, but there could still be a range of views among the Committee. Furthermore, this is a fast-changing situation. And with inflation pressures continuing to build over the past few days, even more dovish or balanced members of the MPC could start to change their assessments of risks. With that in mind, the Record of Meeting accompanying next week's interest rate review will be monitored closely to see where the members of the Committee see the risk. Key areas where the views of the Committee could diverge include the likely duration of the conflict, the impact on the economy, the likelihood of second-round effects driving persistent inflation over the medium-term, and the appropriate course for monetary policy over time. Such discussions might provide some insight into how the consensus view of the MPC might evolve as more is learnt about the evolution of the conflict and its economic impacts.

As part of her efforts to improve central bank transparency, Governor Breman has introduced a full press conference at interim reviews, and this will be the first review under that new framework. Historically, the RBNZ has not released updated forecasts at review meetings, and instead released them at the more complete quarterly updates. However, given the large changes in the economic landscape in recent weeks, the RBNZ is likely to discuss the risks around their previous forecasts. And we wouldn't rule out the chance that they could release some initial forecasts of key variables, like GDP, inflation, and the OCR.

AUS: Feb Household Spending Indicator (%mth)

Apr 7, Last: 0.3, Westpac f/c: -0.2

Mkt f/c: 0.2, Range: -0.2 to 0.4

The Household Spending Indicator rose 0.3%_{mth} in January, in line with its average monthly pace over the past two years. Annual growth eased back to 4.6%_{yr}, having averaged just over 5%_{yr} through the second half of 2025.

The detail from our Westpac-DataX Card Tracker suggests the ABS spending indicator will show a dip for the February month. Our forecast 0.2% decline in the month would take annual growth to 4.2%_{yr}. With population growth tracking at 1.6%_{yr}, the 2.6%_{yr} pace in per capita terms this points to a slight decline in real, inflation-adjusted terms. Of course, all of this pre-dates the Middle East conflict and associated fuel price surge. Our card tracker shows this has already seen significant disruptions to activity in March (see here).

NZ: RBNZ Monetary Policy Review

Apr 8, Official Cash Rate – last: 2.25%, Westpac: 2.25%, Market: 2.25%

We expect the RBNZ to hold the OCR at 2.25% at its 8 April review. We expect the RBNZ to emphasise that it will not react to the first-round impact of higher energy prices on near-term inflation, but that it will respond should there be evidence of second round effects that might create persistent inflation. The Bank is not scheduled to present revised economic projections at this meeting. However, it is possible that the RBNZ will provide some guidance of the likely magnitude of the upward revision to near-term inflation and downward revision to GDP.

US: Mar CPI

Apr 10, %m/m, Last: 0.3%

February saw a 0.3% increase in headline consumer prices as both food and energy contributed to the aggregate impulse. The gain for core prices was measured at 0.2%, although that means underlying inflation continues to run meaningfully above the FOMC's 2.0% target on both an annual and annualised basis.

March is likely to see a material step up in headline inflation as the Middle East conflict shocks energy prices higher. Firms may also take the opportunity to push through additional increases to strengthen margins. All the while, capacity pressures continue to hold up price growth for services, and the weaker dollar and tariff costs support core goods pricing. Inflation risks will remain a lasting concern for the FOMC.
